AT CAPT. LAY'S REQUEST, the late Congressman John L. Burnett secured a resurvey of the Coosa and Alabama Rivers to determine the advisability of securing six-foot navigation. This survey was undertaken by Capt. J. B. Cavanaugh, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army. Capt. Lay urged the engineers in charge to recommend the construction of high power dams which could be built by private capital and which would at the same time improve navigation. However, the Cavanaugh report, made June 30, 1904, failed to carry out Capt. Lay's suggestion. The Cavanaugh plan called for the construction of 20 dams and locks, from Gadsden to Wetumpka, at an estimated cost of $10,024,706, and channel excavations, etc., on the Alabama River, from Wetumpka to Mobile, at an estimated cost of about $1,000,000.

IN REVIEWING THE CAVANAUGH PLAN, the U. S. District Engineer in Alabama and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, said:

"The project of securing six-foot navigation on the Coosa and Alabama rivers does not justify the expenditure of anything like the sums mentioned and is not worthy of being undertaken by the General Government at this time."

RIVER IMPROVEMENT on the Coosa was thus given another set-back. Lock 4 having been completed in 1891 or 1892, no work was done on the Coosa until the completion of Lock 12 by Alabama Power Company in 1914. Twenty-five miles of the Coosa were opened to navigation by this development at no cost to the State or Federal Government, and 15 miles additional were made navigable upon the completion of Mitchell Dam in January, 1923.

Congress was and is unwilling to appropriate the millions of dollars necessary for navigation improvement. The only other means of obtaining improved navigation is through water power development.

TWO THINGS CLANTON NEEDS AND MUST HAVE

The first man who grasps the fact that Clanton is no longer a country villiage but has become a real city and requires some of the necessary conveniences of a city, and who will put up a real dairy here and operate it right, is going to have a gold mine.

We know whereof we speak and are not attempting to blow over any boom talk.

There is hardly a family in town but what requires more or less milk and butter. It is next to impossible to get even enough buttermilk to make bread with, and so far as securing it regularly and on time, that is absolutely out of the question.

What we need and what the people are anxious to see, is a real dairy, with regular early morning deliveries, and a system they can depend on from day to day.

A real dairy like that would be a success from the start. Give the people real, dependable service and there is no question about the support. As we have said before, Clanton has built up on every side until there is no more room for cow pens. We are suffering for a real live, dependable dairy service.

Another thing. We have a first class bakery here, but they don't go far enough. A Bakery that will deliver fresh, warm rolls in time for breakfast, with other bakery sundries to match, will make a hit in Clanton.

Such service as we refer to is the kind they give in other cities. It would have to be first class and regular. The housewife can't afford to depend on a service like that unless it is always prompt, always on time and always up to all it should be in other ways.

Here are two good openings for the right people. They are bound to succeed if properly handled. There are also some of the finest dairy sites close in to Clanton that can be found in Alabama.

ALREADY LEASED

The new Hays building now under construction has already been fastened by Mr. Lee Smith, our pioneer wholesale grocery man, by a long lease.

Mr. Danforth, the contractor, is turning things around in a hurry there and is going to rush the completion as rapidly as is consistent with good work.

The building is to go two stories and will front 7th street with a 70 foot white pressed brick and plate glass finish.

This will be a splendid addition to the growing business district.

MRS. J. M. WYATT PASSES AWAY

A pall of sadness and sorrow was cast over this entire section last Friday morning when the news was circulated that Mrs. Phariby Catherine Wyatt, devoted and faithful wife of our esteemed fellowtownsman, Mr. J. M. Wyatt, had crossed over the river and gone on to that bright eternal shore, to wait under the shade of the trees for those dearly loved ones left behind.

Mrs. Wyatt had been sick for several weeks and for quite a number of days her wearied spirit hovered on the brink of death's turbid stream, while loved ones at home and her hundreds of friends fought off the grim destroyer with their utmost effort, their hopes and their prayers, but an all wise Providence had struck the hour for her departure and, at last the battle was lost, and the spirit of the sufferer was relieved of its pain, and freed from its clogging tenement of clay and winged its joyous flight to that rapturous home above, where all heartaches and sorrows are forgotten and where eternal happiness awaits all such blessed and saintly characters as Mrs. Wyatt.

The deceased was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Riley Robinson, of Providence, who are still living. Until 23 years ago she remained in the Providence community when the family moved on a fine farm just east of Clanton. Last October her husband moved the family into Clanton, to a home on east second avenue, where they have resided since.

She joined the Baptist church at Providence 30 years ago and, at the time of her death was a loyal and consistent member of the Baptist church at Friendship.

The remains were carried back to her girlhood home at Providence for interment at 11 a. m. Saturday 14. Dr. S. J. Ezell, assisted by Revs Norris and Parrish, conducted the religious exercises attending the burial while Undertaker Martin was in charge of all the funeral arrangements.

Mrs. Wyatt was 50 years of age and had lived an active useful life for all of those years and it can be truly said of her that the world was made better and brighter by her life.

She leaves of her immediate family to miss and mourn her, an aged father and mother, a most devoted husband, five brothers and two sisters and four children.

Mr. and Mrs. Riley Robinson, of Providence, are her parents. Rev. W. W., R. M., C. H. G. C. and Jno. E. Robinson and Mrs. T. G. Wyatt are her sisters. Her children are Representative W. M. Wyatt, Editor T. E. Wyatt and Misses Alice and Edna Wyatt all of Clanton.

So has passed "from death unto life" a noble christian woman, the masterpiece of God's handiwork. The influence of her life will live out, through the years to come, like sweet incense, to hallow her memory.

To those bereaved parents thus chastened in the sunset of life, and to that awfully bereft husband, consoling last the gentle, sympathetic consoling comrade who has travelled hand in hand and step by step with him for all these years, to those brothers and sisters, who have thus lost a bright link in the family chain, and to those stricken children, who have, all their life long, had the comforting salace of a mother's love and guidance, we would extend all of the sympathy of our heart, realizing how futile and meaningless the words of friends may sound to them in this dark hour. Over on that beautiful shore they can always remember now that one fond heart is watching and waiting for them and that the simple faith that carried this christian woman throught life is the only trice source of comfort in this hour of sorrow.

THEY ARE BUILDING IT NOW

It is said "that all things come to him who waits," and we guess there must be some degree of truth in the statement, for Clanton has waited for several long months for the promised bridge over the railroad on 4th avenue and, behold, our dreams are coming true, for Mr. M. E. Roy is on the job now with his bridge gang and work is progresing nicely in the erection of a splendid 24-foot bridge that will care for all traffic.

We are indeed glad to see it.

AN AWFUL ACCIDENT

On last Thursday afternoon one of those strange dispensations of Providence, that are beyond the human conception, was visited on the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. White who reside at Benson, in the Mulberry district of our county.

Mrs. White was engaged in some of her outdoor duties and their sweet little baby girl, just one day short of two years old, together with a little brother of seven, were in the house. The little boy took from its rack, what he supposed to be an empty shot gun, and by some means the gun was discharged, the entire load taking effect in the body of the little baby girl and her precious life was snuffed out in a second, and the lovely little victim was carried by the angles to heaven to spend her second birthday.

These awful events happen in this world at times, and it is hard to see the wisdom and mercy of such pitiful scenes as this and were it not for the happy assurance that a merciful God has reasons far beyond our finite understanding for allowing these awful blows to fall on us here, the pain and suffering of the sorrowing ones left behind would be unendurable. He knows and does all things for the best and whether we can see it or not, good and not evil always results from these terrible calamities.

The little "tenment of clay" was tenderly and beautifully laid to sleep in the Mulberry cemetery Friday morning at 11 o'clock, surrounded by a large crowd of distressed and sympathizing relatives and friends.

Dr. S. J. Ezell, pastor of the Baptist church in Clanton, officiated at the interment, and his message to the bereaved was tender and sympathetic and soothing.

To our friends, Mr. and Mrs. White, and to the sorrowing children and other relatives the Chilton County News would love to convey some message of comfort, but language is furtile. In any effort we might make to tell them just how earnestly we sorrow with them. "Into each life some rain must fall, some days be dark and dreary," and right now is the sad hour of their Gethsecmene and we can only point them to the One who conquored death and who said: 'Suffer little children to come unto me."

Behind the darkest cloud the sun is still shinning.

TRAFFIC REGULATIONS

Now before we say a word we want to tell you that so far as we are personally concerned, a speed limit of 900 miles an hour would suit us just as well as any and the parking of cars all over the streets and up and down the sidewalks would be perfectly all right. So far as traffic regulations are concerned, personally we are absolutely indifferent.

If they rig a 6 pound cannon and a caliope whistle on every car and truck that does business on our streets and put them in active operation day and night, that too would be all right so far as we are personally interested. We have listened to the unholy noises that go on continuously, as the auto traffic moves too and fro, until we are uterly immune to any additional racket that may be added, but what gets our goat is to have so many traveling people, and persons who are used to the ways of other towns, to gasp and stare and express their wonder and surprise that we are so far behind the times and seem to know so little about the eternal fitness and decency of things.

We hate to hear people make fun of Clanton to our face and intimate that we don't even know how town people do.

So far as appears to strangers, we have no regulations here, and people run as fast as they want to, park where and how they please, turn their cars around in the center of the busiest block in town on the busiest days, race their motors with the cut out open blow their sirens and do any old way they want to.

Now that all is perfectly all right with us, but strangers make fun of our town.

THE STORK MAKES A VISIT

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Ross are receiving the congratulations of their many friends this week over the arrival at their home last Thursday night of a little baby girl. Mother and child are both doing nicely.

MR. A. B. BAXLEY BACK

The State Manager of the U. F. of A. [illegible] yesterday to the home office here from a trip of several days that carried him over 7 or 8 counties.

He reports the progress of the order as being very perfect. A county organization was established in Bibb county last week.

Mr. Baxley says that on an average the grass crop in every zone in the territory he has just covered and that the crop will not be more than sufficient until Christmas.

As to cotton, he says it is very [illegible] some good and some very poor. The weed is looking thrifty and it is fruiting very well, but the boll weevil is present in all localities and is [illegible] some places while in others they are not doing much damage.

GONE ON VACATION

The members of the Methodist church, as a token of appreciation for the faithful service of their pastor, Dr. C. C. Wilkerson, gave him a vacation of two weeks. The Doctor left in his car Monday morning for Columbia, Ala., the home of his parents, to take advantage of his rest period among the old home circle and the many friends of his boyhood days. We wish for him a joyous and restful trip.

BILLINGSLEY BARBECUE

There will be a Barbecue at Billingsley Friday, July 27, for the benefit of the Baptist church.

Several prominent men will be present and speak on different subjects.

Everyone cordially invited to attend.

TO TOUR THE WEST

Their first stop will be at Denver, Col., where he will meet a brother he has not seen in 10 years and from that their intinary has not been definately decided on. He purposes to buy a car there and do the west and the Pacific coast by auto.

Their trip will probably consume 4 or 5 weeks.

Mr. Shaw has been a hard worker for 20 years without a single vacation, and we hope that nothing but good luck and good health will smile on them during this trip. Our very best wishes go with them.

"STOP LOOK AND LISTEN"

When approaching a grade crossing on the railroad, especially if you are speeding your auto a little, it is very important to always remember that all moving trains have the right of way.

He attempted to cross the tracks as a southbound freight train was passing. The result was that he got the whole front end of the truck demolished. Fortunately no one was injured.

ON VACATION

Last Sunday afternoon, following the midday servic[illegible] D. S. I. Ezell, pastor of the Baptist church, together with Mrs. Ezell and the two little children, embarked in his car and left on the first lap of a long trip to Eatonton, Ga. to visit his parents and other relatives and friends over there.

He has a three weeks leave of absense and we wish, for him and his, a most enjoyable visit and rest.

PICTURE SHOW AT NEW SALEM

Rev. Davenport is going to give a religious and educational screen show at New Salem church next Sunday evening July22, at 7:30 o'clock.

This will be a very interesting and instructive service and every one who can do so should see it. There will be no admission charged.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

The whisky people must have decided to kill their cause forever when they tied it on to Al Smith.

The blackberry crop did not material ize this year. Just look what that Volstead law has done.

Are we going to have to say when the legislature adjourns that we have just had two of a kind in succession.

"Thimble, thimble, who has the thimble"—or that 2 cents gasoline tax either.

Hens, chickens and hen fruit are still strictly associating with the rich and well to do

It takes a four square man to be a successful politician these days. That allows him four faces to smile with and four tongues to lie with.

This may be a pretty tough world, but it is a lots better one than the one most of us are heading for if we don't change our course.

Our county treasury is gutted, likewise our county roads and bridges. But you an airplane if you want to travel any more in Chilton County.

Lee Long is developing rapidly into a chronic misfit. If the legislature has any muzzel on hand it is time now to produce them

We want somebody to tell us quick. Who is a duly elected Senator or representative expected to represent—himself or the people?

The idea of "serving the people" is mighty good campaign dope, but it look, like it fails, to have any effect when the time for service arrives.

Let's all look on the bright side. If we don't make a good crop this year, there is another year coming—and may-be we won't plant everything to cotton next time

Country melons selling at $1.00 per head and tomatoes so high it will almost bankrupt the average man to look at the basket they come in don't sound much like hard times.

A high protective tariff is rightly named for it certainly "protects" the capitalist from all danger of having to part from his ill gotten gains.

If the next Congress would devote the first 365 days of its existence entirely to repealing fool laws, generations yet unborn would rise up and call them blessed.

Old methods become obsolete. Old jokes become stale. Old political tricks finally lose their efficiency, but some cheap politicians can't seem to realize that fact

If you are going to be a liar and expect to succeed at it, you better go to cultivating your memory right now. That is one calling that requires a 100 per cent memory.

It may be that figures don't lie, but they can be twisted around to where they can be made to convey the most extravagant misrepresentation that the imagination can picture.

Our pocket book is mighty shallow but a basket of nice home grown totatoes can always go to the bottom of it.

There is not a member of the Alabama legislature who does not know that 75 per cent of the voters want to see the convict lease system abolished. If they don't know it they are too ignorant to find the way back home but look how they vote. Is it impossible to divorce our law making bodies from the domination of wealth?

ARE WE MAKING PROGRESS

and Maintaining those principles upon which this great Government was founded, That this is a Government of the People, for the People and By the People.

He who, has found time to peruse history for a few years past and baseing his conclusions from the facts derived therefrom together with a reasonable and honest interpretation of the condition of affairs, at present, must conclude that this age is falling far short of the expectations and wills of those founders of this great government, who so ardently strived to make this a fit place to live. The inteligent mind, after viewing the epoch making period of recent years can not help but find itself in the midst of a mighty war, to throw off the yoke of burdensome taxation and religious servitude. In fact this is so outstanding a feature of history that we, who find some gra titude and appreciation of the liberties handed down to us, by those ballant men and women of a few years ago, can not help but find disfavor in the acts of the, small, selfish narrow, and domineering politician who for the sake of being an office helder would damn a great county or country, or that politician of the same type, who being so narrow is not big enough to put forth an idea, is forced to resort to making laws to tax the whole land and country, as did those demigogs who in years past, who knew nothing except the Kings conimand, and like a few of the present day type.

It has been said that this is a progressive age and to a certain extent this is true, but from a governmental standpoint the word "progressive" is a misnomer. We have in some things really and truly become progressive and I will mention a few: The business man has become so inthused in his avocation that he is a skear'd (afraid) to dabble in politics and thereby turns the reins of government over to the slimy tongue politician; a good man or religious man can not, under the progressive age hold office, for he is too good to get mixed up in politics; the machine gang holding office, are so progressive that they can go out and corrupt the electorate and hold office by that method; we have actually arrived to the point in the history of our country where we pay office holders ex officio fees, besides their salary and fees derived by their acts; we are now paying office holders commissions for collecting money that we are required to pay or be liable to a criminal prosecution for failing to do so; besides all this we have allowed the progressive bunch of politicians to tax us to the constitutional limit and not being able to derive a sufficient amount of revenue at that rate they have become so domineering that they raise the value of our property to get more taxes.

and speaking of taxes, where is the man or woman in Chilton county who pays one farthing of tax that can point to one appreciatable return for his or her money, save a short period of schooling offered his or her child. We pay a state tax, county tax, road tax, school tax privilege tax, automobile license tax, poll tax, income tax, inhertance tax, chauffeurs tax, revenue tax and stamp tax. Where does it go? If you consider the amount of the taxes paid and drive over the roads of this county you are convinced that no moneys were appropriated for their upkeep for they are rediculious and shameful, when we are so progressive, especially. If you happen to be one of those fellows who has to pay these taxes and every man and woman who make their living by the sweat of their brow, has it to do, you might get progressive and buy you an automobile (Ford) so that you will be able to get to the tax office to pay your tax, and if you do you will have to buy you a license for it and besides pay the Judge of Probate a fee of fifty cents for allowing you the privilege of doing so. And he will then collect out of the amount you pay him a commission for collecting the license from you.

After you have rigged up the automobile, to be able to get to the tax office on time, for if you don't you will be penalized and taxed more for not doing so, or ready to send your child to school to share in the only return for your tax money, low and behold you are then up against it again, for you have to pay a tax on gasoline you buy to run the old tin lizzie. The real fact is we misjudged the name instead of being pro gressive' it is political 'oppressiveness." It is nothing short of the fruits of narrow minded politicians and the lack of business men having interested themselves in the affairs of their country.

Where does it go? If you can tell anything about what an ex-officio fee is then you can begin to realize the channels where it is going, for as stated above. there are officials in Chilton county who draw money out of the treasurery by virture of being an office holder. You pay the Judge of probate while sitting as head of the commissioners court a salary, you pay him a fifty cent fee for the priviledge of buying a tag for your automobile, you pay him a commission on the money you pay for the license or tag, you pay him a salary while sitting as Judge of the County Court, you pay him while making up a list of the voters, or poll lists; you pay him for recording your papers; you pay him for holding court and hearing matters regarding the winding up of estates, wills, guarians, lunitics and condemning of lands for road purposes etc. You pay the other officers of the County their fees, salaries and "ex-officio" pensions; you pay the Circuit Judge, Circuit Solicitor, and the county solicitor their salaries. You pay for the tick inspectors, for the vat and the contents put therein, and then furnish the hand or go yourself with the cow and give her a real baptising, all at your own expense, and at the wish of some politician, all because you have loved one of these fellows who posed as a walking savior of the land and country from ruin and damnation, and who felt that he could do something for the county, just as it is regarding the COUNTY COURT BILL NOW PENDING, which seeks to reduce the cost of taxes and expenses and save the tax payers from further expense. Why? You have a Circuit Judge, his salary is paid, and you have a solicitor and his salary is paid, and why not let him perform the duties, which rightfully belong to his court? He can and will under the terms of this bill come to Clanton and hold the court without a jury and without any additional expense, there by saving the salary paid the Probate Judge, and besides place the duties on a man learned in the law. The money derived from the fines in the Circuit Court will go into the county treasury, just as fi imposed and paid through the county court, besides this there are two other features to this bill that are strikingly toward a desired reform and it is this: It will save the unfortunate man who happens to be brought to the bar of justice, for under the present system if a man is arrested and brought before the county court he can not secure a jury trial but must appeal to the Circuit Court, after a decision of the county court; and if convicted in the circuit and county court he is taxed with two separate and distinct bills of costs, for example if Ikie Einstine, was arrested for violating the prohibition law and tried in the county court and convicted there is taxed $30.00 solicitors fee, and should he appeal for a jury trial and be convicted in the Circuit Court he is again taxed with another $30.00 solicitors fee, making a total of $60.00, besides the other costs incident to each court, but if he was first arrested and brought before the Circuit Court as provided in this bill he would be saved one of these costs bills, for only one trial is necessary. There si no additional amount of jury cases by this method. Another and the second reason why this bill should have the loyal support of the citizenship, it will have a tendency to bring about a greater respect for law and the duly constituted authorities, which have been lessened by and through criticisms, that our court is a family affair and not as strong and impregnable as it should be, along this channel.

The real apponents to the County Court bill have said and will continue to say that it is not for their own personal gain, that they oppose same, but that the bill has a tendency to injury the county. If that is true, we suggest that we get a small return for other taxes and then we will allow ourselves to become qualified for a change of mind. Otherwords, proof of the pudding is a piece of the pie. But the fact remains that this bill has a tendency to break down one of the fortresses or cut off a channel used by scheming politicians for personal agrandisement and the furthermore of their political passions, and the citizens who desire a return to that economy and retrenchment as well as a purfication of the courts of our county that is becoming a real American people, will see to it that nothing on his part is left undone to put through this bill as well as all other programs which have a like tendency.

WE ARE THANKFUL

Friday may be an unlucky day for some folks, but we rather believe it must be our lucky day.

Last Friday morning, as we were wondering what our dinner would be like, Dr. Hance Alred presented us with a nice sack of the finest tomatoes, fresh off the vine, that we have seen yet.

If we were a handsome girl and some fellow wanted to capture us, all he would have to do would just bring us some tomatoes like those and we would fall into his arms like a ripe peach.

So you see how we feel about it. If there is anything the Doctor wants us to do now, we are rear'in to go.

In the meantime we extend to him our sincere thanks for this splendid treat and may all pests and insects pass his garden by and its yield be abundant and lasting.

A good many melons and a few nice tomatoes are coming in from the local farms now. Prices are ranging reasonably high so far.

A BEAUTIFUL WEDDING

One of the most beautiful and interesting events that has occured in Athens in some time was the marriage last Wednesday afternoon, June 20th, of Rev. Horace G. Williams of Butler, Ky., and Miss Maggie Lou Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Johnson of this place. It was a church wedding.

The First Baptist Church of which the bride is a member, has been both artistically and beautiful decorated by the loving friends of the popular bride, who is one of the most cultured and charming young girls ever reared in Athens. Ferns, southern smilax, pink hydrangees were used in great profusion, and made the church beautiful for this interesting event, never to be forgotten by those participating in the happy and solemn event.

The house was packed with the friends of the lovely bride, who has grown up in Athens from a small girl, and since her graduation at the city school and both parents and a students grew fond of her as well as her popularity with the young people generally. The friends gathered to witness the union of the two young lives, and all were interested because of the high esteem in which the bride is held. Preceeding the ceremony a musical program of great beauty was rendered. Mr. Gus Riherd, recently of the Cincinnati conservatory, whose deft touch on the piano, brings out all the sweetness of the instrument, and Miss Myrtle Thompson, of Birmingham a friend of the bride, in a rich, sweet voice, rendered a program of rare beauty.

The bridal party entered the church to the strain of that wonderful touching wedding march, Mendelssohn. The lovely little ribbon bearers, Elizabeth Berzette and Lois Carter, wearing lavender organdy, Martha Riheard and Gladys Swafford, wearing pink organdy, entered first with the ribbons. Then came little Miss Louise Caine and Ruth Swafford, who opened the gates for the bridal party.

The ushers Mr. W. E. Willis, Dr. A. L. Rogers, Mr. C. W. Kendrick and Mr. L. W. Cox, next entered. They were followed by the matron of honor Mrs. W. E. Willis, sister of the bride, she was lovely in a lavendar canton crepe gown with silver trimmings. She wore a picture hat of lavendar fiber baid with crown encircled by a wreath of lilacs. She carried a shower bouquet of pink and lavendar sweet peas. Then came Miss Bernice Clements of Benton, Ala., who was maid of honor. She was lovely in a gown of pink taffeta, with a hat of pink braid, trimmed with a spray of shower bouquet of sweet peas in the pastel shades. MasterJerome Willians, nephew of the groom, in a white satin suit carried the ring on a satin pillow.

The bride wore a three piece suit of beige poiret twill, with lavendar hat. Her corsage was of orchids and pink rose buds. She entered with her father by whom she was given in marriage. The groom and his best man, Mr. L. S. Sedberry, of Lewisburg, entered from the side door meeting the bride at the altar.

The beautiful ring ceremony was impressively said by Dr. J. O. Williams pastor of the church, who is a brother of the fortunate and happy young groom, who has taken from our church, educational and social life one of the rarest and most deserving young ladies ever known in Athens.

Hundreds of admiring friends extend to the fortunate young minister, who has dedicated his life to the service of his Master, their cordial and hearty congratulations on winning for a life companion, a woman so cultured so educated and equipped for the duties of life as is his bride. She will be to him a constant encouragement.

He is a young minister of promise and is preparing for the great duties that spread out ahead of him. He is getting the equipment that will enable him to go out and build up the waste places in the Master's vinyard, and with so competent a helpmeet, the possibilities for his future, are unlimited.

Immediately following the martige they left for his field of duty at Butler, Kentucky, where he is doing pastoral work during his vacation.

The News extends with hunderds of other friends its best wishes for a long, useful happy, and prosperous life of these two who start life under such a beautiful canopy.—Athens Times.

TOMATO GROWERS NOTICE

Tomato growers who wish to destroy bugs or worms of any kind that are damaging the tomatoes are advised to spray with arsenate of lead solution. A teaspoon well filled with arsenate of lead to each gallon of water ought to be strong enough. If this does not kill the worms a little more arsenate of lead should be used. Care should be taken not to use too strong a mixture as it would damage the plants. Arsenate of lead can be purchased at most drug stores.

To aid tomatoes to resist attacks of disease, they should be sprayed with bordeaux mixture. This can be purchased at a drug store in the dry form and used according to direction on package. If this spray is used, arsenate of lead should be mixed with it at the rate of one half pound to 12 1-2 gallons of the bordeaux spray

In preparing all powders for spraying, they should be disolved in a small quanity of water before mixing with full amount of water required. Any tomato grower who desires further information should see Mr. Dixon at the canning factory.

KEEP AMERICA'S WAMPUM SOUND!

By SAMUEL H. BEACH,
President, Savings Bank Division, American Bankers Association.

Although the United States is today upon a solid gold basis, we nevertheless know of our own knowledge what inflation means. It would take long to recall in detail the bitter experiences which this nation suffered during the Civil War and the years which followed it, and in our present easy condition we might think such conditions could never again arise. But with such men as Henry Ford and Thomas A. Edison talking about commodity money there is no foretelling what may happen.

S. H. Beach

One of the plainest lessons taught by financial history is that whenever a nation issues paper money with nothing back of it, that nation is on the road to disaster. Look at Russia with its worthless rubles and Germany with its worthless marks. Think of what happened in France during the years immediately following our Revolutionary War.

The common people of France rose in their might, tore down the Bastile, and made reprisal for centuries of kingly crime and oppression. The profligate court had piled up taxes until they were unbearable. The enraged populace killed King Louis XVI, and also his queen, Marie Antoinette. But they only threw themselves out of the frying pan into the fire so far as finances were concerned.

Unsound Money Tyranny

At the very worst point of their currency inflation they found themselves under the absolute domination of Robespierre. In order to meet the growing scarcity of coin, paper money called assignats were issued. First 400,000,000 francs worth, then 800,000,000 were added with the distinct understanding that the 1,200,000,000 would be the full extent of the issue. This pledge was soon broken and further issues brought the total up to 3,700,000,000 francs.

Frightful depreciation was the inevitable result; and legislation was passed making it a crime, with six years' imprisonment as the penalty, if any one should refuse to take the paper assignats at their face value. Just think of it! A French peasant after working the entire year to produce a crop was compelled by law to accept payment for that crop in paper money, which he knew to be worthless, or go to prison.

It was simply legalized robbery. When the penalty was increased to twenty years imprisonment the inevitable climax came. The Reign of Terror was at its height. Robespierre was in supreme power. He suggested that more assignats be issued and if the people did not take them the guillotine should be the penalty.

Robespierre's End

This unheard of outrage was more than the people could stand. An unknown man arose on the floor of the convention and denounced Robespierre, reciting the heinous crimes he had committed, and so worked upon the feelings of the audience that Robespierre, the tyrant, became Robespierre, the convicted criminal. Two days later he was led to the guillotine. France had learned her financial lesson well—that money must have value back of it.

The fallacy of unsound money is sure to confront us again. Never is there enough of everything for all the people. The struggle for existence is a real struggle, and those who find themselves in the lower strata of human society are ready at any time to grasp at fiat money or any of the other things which misguided politicians hold out to them.

My whole purpose is to drive home the fact that danger lies ahead and to urge every one to let no opportunity go by to use voice and influence toward keeping the wampum of these United States, as it is today, the soundest currency in the world.

SOME BANK SALARIES

Investigations made by the Missouri Bankers Association have revealed that 368 banks in the state in towns of under 2,000 population are paying their cashiers and chief executives an average of only $110 a month. Only 273 of the 1,162 reporting banks in towns under 5,000 population pay the president a salary. The report says:

"It indicates that, even allowing for the economy of living in small communities, the cashiers and managing officers of these 1,162 banks, who receive an average of $140 per month, either must have personal means to begin with, or must maintain the standards necessary to their positions as the leaders of their communities and the builders of the commonwealth by means of 'side lines,' such as selling insurance, collecting commissions on farm loans, and trading in real estate."

WHY IS MONEY AFRAID OF ALABAMA BONDS

It costs more in Alabama to borrow money to build schools water works, roads, sewers, court houses and other public improvements or to meet public obligations already incurred than in almost any other state in the United States.

Why is money afraid of Alabama bonds? It isn't because the state isn't rich. It is among the richest in natural resources and high type of American citizenery. Yet, many states with only a fraction of Alabama's wealth borrow money more cheaply than Alabama can. The reason is that Alabama has an antiquated tax rate limit that makes payment of interest on or principal public bonds uncertain and sometimes impossible. Because of this improper tax rate limit, Alabama communities, willing and well able to honor their honest obligations have at various times been compelled by law to default either interest or principal of their bonds.

As a consequence, when Alabama, or any municipality, or taxing district in the state needs money for public improvements it must pay a higher rate of interest than would be paid for the very same money for the very same purposes outside of Alabama.

At a recent public offering of Alabama bonds only two bids were submitted. Had the tax rate limit been non-exsitent there would have been 15 or 20 bids. Most important investment banking houses, insurance companies, fraternal orders and private investors will not buy Alabama bonds. They prefer to pay more for bonds of other states and municipalities in other states, where principal and interest payments are assured.

To stop this heavy loss to Alabama and to enable the state and its communities to sell their bonds as advantageously as do other states and their communities, it is proposed to ask the present legislature to submit a constitutional amendment to the voters, to amend the old tax rate limit.

The amendment, however, in no way would interfere with any debt limit by the state. It would not permit the state or its communities to be run into debt. Its sole purpose is to permit the State or any part of Alabama to levy sufficient taxes to pay its bonded indebtedness. It would remove the fear money now has of Alabama bonds and would lower the cost of building schools, water works, sewers, court-houses, roads and other public improvements throughout the entire state.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC MEETING

In view of certain local bills, which are proposed to be introduced in the present session of the Legislature in which all of the citizens of the County are vitally interested, a public meeting of the citizens of the County, regardless of political faith, is hereby called to meet at the Court House in Clanton, Alabama on Saturday 28 day of July, 1923, for the purpose of considering said bills and taking such action as the citizens deem best for the welfare of the County.

Thos. A. Curry, Percy M. Pitts, J. W. P. Murphy, William Walker Z. T. Abney, T. L. Elam. B. O. Glover, C. N. Parnell J. O. Middleton H. W. Giles, Will J. Foshee, W. M. Foshee.

We give space to the above as a courtesy to Mr. Curry, but as the Democratic party of Chilton county have already settled all questions and taken the proper steps to put through a bill abolishing the county court, we dare say this mixed mass meeting will not interest them.

These free for all mass meetings, have an unsavory reputation in Chilton county and the past history of such gatherings is not encouraging to the average good citizen.

TWO SHORT TRIPS

Last Friday we made two short auto trips out of town. One trip extended about 12 miles west and the other about 8 miles south of the city.

These were our first trips out of town since before the crops were planted and we were especially interestd in seeing for ourselves what the crop outlook really is.

We found cotton in general rather small for the time of year and one discouraging feature seemed to be a scarcity of fruit on the weed. Blooms were very scattering considering the size of the stalk and we fear the ravages of the boll weevil are responsible for it. They are in the fields in great numbers and unless the hot sunshine curtails their activities to a great extent, they are going to hurt the crop more this year than on any former year since they made their first appearance here.

Corn, as a rule, is young yet and there does not seem to be a very extensive acreage planted.

The farmers in general have their crops in pretty fair conditions and the battle against General Green is practically won.

We saw several large tomato patches that looked fairly good. Of course, these large areas were planted for the canning factory and are not so forward as those grown in the garden for home consumption.

Several oat crops along our route have been harvested and the stubble sown to peas for hay. This looked good and is an evidence of up-to-date farming.

All in all, we could not see starvation looking in at the farmer's door, but neither did we se any evidence to denote a bumper crop.

It is to be hoped that what we lack in yield this year will be made up by good prices this fall.

A PERFECT ARRANGEMENT

The Powell Pressing Parlors have leased, for a term of years the new building just being completed by Col. G. C. Walker on north 7th street.

The interior is being constructed especially to accommodate the needs of a first class dry cleaning and pressing establishment, and we doubt if the arrangement is equalled in any city in Alabama.

Mr. Powell has also cought the vision of the future and is preparing to meet the demand of a real city in his line. A trip through the building will surprise you.

Editor Chilton County News:

Dear Sir and Friend.

I desire, through your paper, to express my sincere thanks and heartfelt appreciation for the kind words, letters, cards, and all messages which came to me when things looked saddest.

I must say that the various tokens of love and esteem from my friends were so many that it overwhelmed me with emotion to think how many friends, good and true, I did have.

I am pleased to be able to inform all that my condition is now improving and I hope after a short time to be able to be on my feet and at myself again.

For the present, all who care to see me socially or professionally, will find me at the hospital from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m.

After trying doctors nurses, hospitals and mosquitoes in New Orleans for awhile. I have decided that Clanton compares very favorably in all but the latter.

Yours sincerely.

"INTERNATIONAL BANKER" A MYTH

Otto H. Kahn Refutes Idea That Foreign Finance Activities Dull Allegiance to America.

BANKING REFLECTS BUSINESS

"International Farmer" and Other Business Men Who Sell to Foreign Markets Create Demand for International Financial Service.

The idea that bankers engaged in financing foreign trade and in handling foreign bond flotations are a particular cult of "international bankers" actuated by motives differing from those of other bankers was refuted recently by Otto H. Kahn of New York, in an address before the Rochester Chamber of Commerce.

"There is no such thing as an 'International Banker' in America, as the meaning of the term is generally understood," Mr. Kahn said. "He exists in the imagination of people all too numerous, but he does not exist in the flesh. You might just as well speak of the 'International Farmer' because the farmer sells a certain percentage of his crops to Europe, or of the 'International Manufacturer.'

"The banker maintains, and can maintain, international contact, and conduct international business, only to the extent that American industry, commerce and agriculture are international. True, the banker must take within his purview continuously the conditions of affairs and the current of things throughout the world, but so must the exporter and importer, and so must the farmer take into account the prices and tendencies of the world market in Liverpool.

Banking Mostly Home Business

"The American banker's market is the home market. His success is conditioned upon the capacity and willingness of the American investor to absorb the securities which he offers. His very existence depends upon the confidence and co-operation of the public and of his fellow-bankers—and any banker whose activities would justly create the impression that he was actuated by cosmopolitan rather than by American interests would very soon lose that confidence and following.

"The business which he does for his own account in, with, or for Europe, is inconsiderable as compared to the business he does in America. His principal functions in relation to Europe are to provide the requisite banking facilities for export and import and for travelers. That part of his functions which consists in financing loans of foreign governments or industries has hitherto been, with sporadic exceptions, of relatively inconsiderable proportions as compared to the vastness of the volume of his transactions in financing American industry, commerce and enterprise.

Necessity for Foreign Credits

"In saying this, I do not mean to imply that there is anything that calls for apology in the floating of foreign loans in America and in the loaning of American funds to Europe, provided such loans are considered sound as to security and are made for legitimate, constructive purposes. Indeed, such loans ought to, and I believe will, be made in increasing measure, when conditions in Europe will have become such as to warrant it.

"It is manifest that the promotion of our export trade, including, of course, the export of farm products, requires us, under the circumstances as they now are and are likely to remain for some time, to aid the purchasing power of other nations by extending to them financial facilities to a reasonable extent.

"It is the function of the banker to be instrumental in carrying out such transactions. In doing so, he is the means of serving a useful national purpose, just as he served a useful, indeed a highly important national purpose, in being the means of attracting and bringing European capital to America in former years when conditions were reversed and such capital was nothing less than vital to the development of this country and the realization of its opportunities."

FOR SOUND MONEY

Senator Oddie of Nevada, chairman of the United States Senate commission to investigate the problems of gold and silver mining, has allayed the fear that Western Senators, in their zeal to aid the cause of silver, might launch an unsound money wave. "I am for sound money," Senator Oddie says. "There is no thought of bimetalism or departing from the gold standard. We desire to help the great mining industry, but not through the creation of an unsound currency."

The commission is to study and report on the causes of the continuing decrease in the production of gold and silver; the causes of the depressed condition of the gold and silver mining industry in the United States; the production, reduction, refining, transportation, marketing, sale, and uses of gold and silver in the United States and elsewhere; and the effect of the decreased production of gold and silver upon commerce, industry, exchange and prices

GOVERNMENT —POPULAR OR INVISIBLE?

Those who defend the continuance of convict leasing in Alabama seek to impress the popular mind with the argument that the state needs the revenues. The popular mind is not impressed. The people of this state know very well that with a wise and businesslike administration of the public funds there will be a surplus sufficient to care for the convicts without leasing them into slavery.

The people rise to a height greater than that. The people of Alabama demand the prompt and immediate cessation of this disgraceful practice regardless of the financial result. The people of this state know that no sums received from this source can possibly compensate for the injury to the state's reputation thus sustained.

Indeed, the public vision penetrates more deeply than that. The people perceive that the real profit in the transaction goes to those mines and lumber concerns that lease convicts. The people are not deceived by any show of concern for the public revenue. The people are convinced that it is the consideration of private revenue which turns the scale towards continuation of the system.

The proposition all simmers down to this: Shall the voice of the people of Alabama be the controlling influence in deciding this question, or shall the whispered voice of invisible government strike most commandingly upon the ears of the public servants of this state ?

That is the question and that is the issue The legislature, the executive of this state cannot evade that alternative. Either those who privately gain by convict leasing will be accounted by the people as of most influence at Montgomery, or else the public servants at Montgomery will obey the public demand for immediate termination of this nefarious indefensible business.

The eyes of the people of Alabama are upon their duly-elected agents at Montgomery, and the people of Alabama are ready to sit in judgement upon their decision as to convict leasing. How will the executive and the legislature dare to continue the practice and yet continue to lay claim to fulfillment of their public duty? The voice of the people of Alabama has been heard in no uncertain tones. Shall that voice prevail, or shall the whisper of the paid lobbyist be obeyed?—Age-Herald.

Mr. L. M. Lee , of Sampson, Ala., brick mason foreman on the Methodist church work, made his first trip to Lock 12 Sunday. He is enthusiastic over the vastness of the plant as well as the beauty of the location.

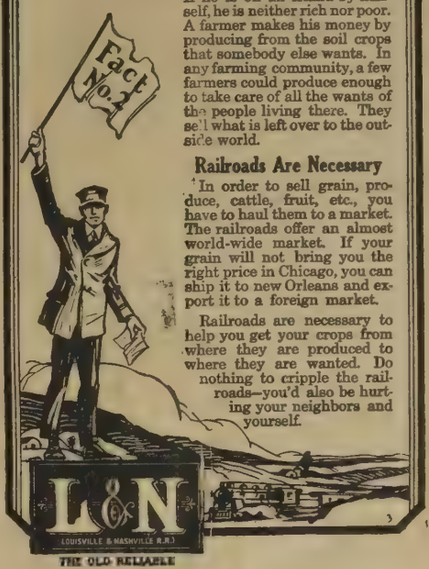
You Couldn't Sell All Your Crop To Your Neighbors



A man makes his money by trading with somebody else. If he is on an island by himself, he is neither rich nor poor. A farmer makes his money by producing from the soil crops that somebody else wants. In any farming community, a few farmers could produce enough to take care of all the wants of the people living there. They sell what is left over to the outside world.

Railroads Are Necessary

In order to sell grain, produce, cattle, fruit, etc., you have to haul them to a market. The railroads offer an almost world-wide market. If your grain will not bring you the right price in Chicago, you can ship it to new Orleans and export it to a foreign market.

Railroads are necessary to help you get your crops from where they are produced to where they are wanted. Do nothing to cripple the railroads—you'd also be hurting your neighbors and yourself.

Last Friday afternoon, due to the courtesy of Mr. J. J. Pockens, we had the pleasure of a brief visit to Cooper.

We met a number of friends while there and found them all in good spirits and hoping for good crops.

Cooper has a planing mill, owned by Mr. DeLoach and a saw mill owned by Mr. Tom Rocket and both seemed to be running on full time and doing good business.

WELL DONE

Mr. Frank Price, nephew of contractor W. S. Price, who is learning the trade of brick mason in the crew of his uncle, decided to stand the hot sun and stick to his job in preference to a good paying inside job. He had a splendid offer by wire from Montgomery Saturday, where the wages were good and the work in the shade, but he turned it down and decided to finish up his trade.

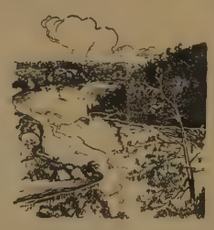
THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

UPPER TALLASSEE DAM ON TALLAPOOSA RIVER. BUILT BY CITIZENS OF MONTGOMERY.

Early attempts to develop state's water powers

One of the first, if not the first, power dams in the State was constructed near Tallassee, Ala., on the Tallapoosa River, by Mr. Henry C. Jones of Montgomery, and associates, in the year 1896. It was the largest of its kind in the country at the time and was considered a remarkable engineering achievement.

The people of that section were gradually beginning to realize that the Coosa and Tallapoosa were capable of developing thousands of horsepower of electricity as they tumbled from the Appalachian foothills, over the rapids of the "Fall Line," and down the plains of Central Alabama.



SITE OF CHEROKEE BLUFFS DAM ON TALLAPOOSA RIVER

The success of the Tallassee dam prompted its builders to undertake another project of larger proportions. In 1900, Messrs. Henry C. Jones, James S. Pinckard and Jack Thorington, citizens of Montgomery, applied to the Legislature for a charter for the Cherokee Development and Manufacturing Company. The charter was granted by Act approved December 8, 1900, and the work of promoting the project began. Large land purchases were made and much preliminary work done. Only Alabama citizens were interested and it was planned to finance the project entirely within Alabama.

It was soon found that the only laws on the statute books permitting the construction of dams across streams were the so-called "Mill Dam Statutes." They grew out of the erection of dams across creeks for grist mills, etc. Having been passed in an age when electricity was unknown, they were inadequate for such large undertakings.

The people of the Coosa Valley had theretofore concerned themselves chiefly with navigation. But they also began to show interest in water power development. In 1901 when Congress refused to appropriate the millions of dollars necessary to open the Coosa to navigation, the Chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee said:

*"Get private capital to build high dams for water power, which will give you navigation. * * * Go back down and get yourself in shape for developing these water powers, and come up and we will take care of you. * * "

The friends of the Coosa and the Tallapoosa then set about to get themselves "in shape." They joined forces and asked the Legislature of 1903 to pass such laws as would enable them to erect dams across streams for the manufacture of electric power for sale to the public.

As a result the Legislature passed an act enlarging the mill dam statutes to include plants for the generation of electricity by water power and another act giving both domestic and foreign corporations the right to acquire lands necessary for the construction and operation of such plants.

Upon the passage of these laws, the promoters of the proposed Cherokee Bluffs dam endeavored to finance the project with local capital. Of their labors Mr. Henry C. Jones says: "The people of Alabama lacked confidence in our plan, despite our success with the Tallassee dam. Home capital was inadequate for so large an undertaking, and we couldn't interest capital outside the State. That is why development has been so difficult and so long delayed."

—Where the opportunity existed years ago for citizens of Alabama to develop Cherokee Bluffs water power, the same opportunity exists for them today. Work on this project is about to begin under a 50-year license from the Federal Power Commission and with the approval of Alabama Public Service Commission. Anyone may acquire an active interest in this development through the purchase of stocks or bonds of Alabama Power Company. Alabama Power Company is not a closed corporation. It will share its profits with anyone.

BURGLARY OR WHAT?

Last Saturday night about 11 o'clock, Mrs. W. E. Martin, wife of Prof. W. E. Martin, who lives just north of the city limits on the B. & M. Highway, was suddenly awakened by some premonition of danger and found standing over the bed occupied by herself and husband, a negro man.

She screamed and awoke Mr. Martin who sprang up and made for his gun which happened to be in an adjoining room.

The negro fled at once and succeeded in getting out of a sure range by the time Mr. Martin secured his gun. He fired several shots at the fleeing miscreant but failed to get him.

Early Sunday morning Sheriff Littlejohn, with Deputy Culp, were on the job and ferreting out a chain of evidence that finally led them to the marauder, one Y. R. Peterson, a negro who lived not far distant from the home of Mr. Martin. They located him at church and arrested him before noon. He has since been boarding at "old 80" and will have a preliminary hearing today.

Moral: Clean up your gun and keep it handy.

A SUNDAY ADDRESS

Prof. McDonald, for several terms the sufficient and popular principal of the High School here, but now located in Wetumpka, delivered an excellent address at the Baptist church last Sunday at the 11 o'clock hour, the pastor being absent on his vacation

SHERIFF LITTLEJOHN STILL SCORING

The other day, the wind being from the west, Sheriff Littlejohn caught a suspicious whiff of boiling corn, so he loaded up in his trusty flivver and followed the scent.

His atomed olfactories had not deceived him, for he found one Mac Henley under suspicions circumstances, and investigation discovered the source of the odor.

Two charges against Henley resulted from the trip, one for having whiskey in his possession and the other for knowing too much about how to make it.

The sheriff is a mighty accomodating fellow but he won't let us have any booze, so you better cut it out.

Every 100 per cent white man in the United States will deprecate the action of President Harding in trying to force social equality on the people of the South. He has chosen his pain with the negro and we guess he kuows what he likes.

Same Old Game

"YOU MAY BRAKE, YOU MAY SHATTER THE VASE IF YOU WILL, BUT THE SCENT OFTHE ROSES WILL LIN-GER THERE STILL."

The Sentiment of this poetic couplet, when transposed into a political significance, were never more forcibly demonstrated than is being done at this moment by an attempt to mislead the good citizens of this county and to betray them into an apparent position directly opposite to their wishes.

We would suppose, and we believe, that the good citizens of the county, having been caught time and again in the past by this identical scheme, worked out and pulled off by the same contingent of disgruntled politicians who are attempting to put it over this time would naturally fight shy of being insulted and made monkeys out of still another time.

The great object and aim of these "citizens meetings" in the past has been to stifle the will of the people, and they have been wonderfully successful. A stuffed audience is always provided on these occassions with instructions to do the will of the master, even if it takes a rough house, or a riot to do it. Any speaker who attempts to differ with the aims and objects of the Boss is always heckeled and insulted and finally forced to desist in his efforts to champion the cause of right.

Cut and dried "Resolutions," in keeping with the wishes of a certain questionable faction, are declared passed as expressing the will of the "citizens" when nothing could be further from the truth.

Surely the good citizens of Chilton County have had enough of this kind of purposely misleading trickery and will ignore the hypocrical call has become odious and notorious by its many past deceptions.

The Chilton County News would like to correct a few statements of our neighbor, the Union-Banner, along this line, not with any hope of redeeming him from his flagrant habit of making wild and meaningless statements, but for the sake of giving the real facts in this matter the light.

In the ifrst place, we accept their high sounding "challenge" as to what the people want, and fortunately, we will not have to go in to cut and dried "citizens meetings" to answer them. There is a petition being circulated over the county quietly asking for an expression from the people at home regarding whether they favor the abolishment of the County Court or not. Said petition to meeting with practically a unanimous request that this expensive and unnessary fiasco be abolished.

The signers of this petetion are not confined to party lines by any means, but both parties in the county are clamoring for the quick death of that questionable institution.

In view of these facts the Chilton County News takes pleasure in reiterating its statement that it is representing in this matter the wishes of a very large majority of the good citizens of Chilton County. We would [illegible]

As is customary with the Union-Banner, not having any ground for an argument, they have set up a straw man to fight. They to do away with the Commissioners and appoint a [illegible] seems to get on their nerves. It ought not be for light in pulling such stuff as th[illegible]

But where do they get that idea? Has any bill of that sort ever been legally advertised? We fear our neighbor and his satellites are nothcoming up with the times. If any one has the remotest idea of introducing such a bill as that we are at a loss to know they the. Even to introduce a bill in the legislature the said bill must have been advertised at least 4 weeks. If a board of Revenue bill has been advertised for Chilton County it has certainly escaped our notice. Our neighbor may be in on the deal but we, most assuredly are not.

There was, at one time, some casual discussion among some of the people, both democrats and republicans of the county in regard to the advisability of such a course, but if it was ever seriously considered we failed to hear of it. A notice of such bill appeared in our columns at the time, but no real bill was ever printed and no real intention to introduce the kind of a bill the Union-Banner refers to has ever been entertained by any one, so far as we know and our natural conclusion is that it must be a creature of the editor's imagination.

All of the people of Chilton County may rest absolutely assured, so far as the Democrats of the county are concerned that no such bill will ever be introduced, but we are going to introduce one to abolish the County Court and we feel sure it will pass.

In conclusion we must decline your invitation to attend your "citizens meeting". We have been bit before. We don't like stuffed chickens, stuffed ballot boxes nor stuffed "citizens meetings." We are absolutely fed up on such. We prefer to place our trust in the free and unbiased public sentiment expressed by the 1000 or more signers who have voluntarily asked the legislature to abolish the Chilton County Courts.

Every little once and awhile some of the boys around town try to see if they can't put one over and handle a little joy juice on the sly, but it won't work

Littlejohn, Foshee and Hawk have put an absolute taboo on the succulent elixer and all you are doing when you try to get by with it is just hunting for yourself a little unnecessary trouble and expense.

You better take that trio at their word and leave the stuff off. You are certain to get in trouble if you don't no matter how sharp you may feel like you are. Sooner or later they always get 'em.

SENATOR ADAMS POSITIVE

Senator S. M. Adams was in our office Saturday and requested us to say for him that owing to a previous appointment he can not be at the court house next Saturday to state his position on the question of abolishing the County Court of Chilton County but that he is most unqualifiedly in favor of its abolishment, because he has believed for a long time that the county court was not for the best interest of the citizens of Chilton county.

He feels like the county court fosters and increases litigation and for that reason, is not a good thing for the people, and that it adds an additional burden on the tax payers of the county.

This statement is made at the request of Senator Adams and carries with it no political significance further than the expression of his honest convictions.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

Why is it when girls wear pants they don't seem to bag at the knees?

"By their fruits ye shall know them." A man is known by the company he keeps—especially in political sense.

When the legislature got through operating on the Brandon Revenue bill last Friday we doubt if its own father could recognize it.

If a man goes to the legislature now and votes according to his pre-election pledges, he ceases to be a man of influence at once.

We know several people who comply with the discription the late Sam Jones made when he said: "Some people are so small they would rattle in a mustard seed."

The Age-Herald force will either have to get up earlier or sit up later. We miss the pleasant morning visit of that splendid paper every now and then.

That Revenue Bill and the Convict Lease question have put a terrible cloud over the Senatorial prospects of Gov. Brandon. The people are learning more and more every day.

Several counties in the state are going to ask the legislature to abolish their county court and they are counties where only one political party exists. How do our friends, the enemy, explain that fact?

The Alabama legislature is "between the devil and the deep blue sea" with the convict lease bill. If they abolish the infamous lease system the money SI locks will kick them out. & if they don't, the people will kick them out, so, there you are.

The question of giving the Tuskegee hospital over to negro control is a hobby of President Harding, but if he carries it out, it will be a most disastrous move that will react seriously on the great negro school over there.

The legislature wrangles over the convict lease system. The people are unanimous for its abolishment. The coal operators are determined to perpetulate this form of slavery and the poor convicts are still being beat to death with impunity.

The next general election will be a fight direct between capital and labor. Mr. Harding is going to try the capital end of it if he can get the nomination. Day by day, in every way he is making that fact plainer and plainer.

A modern politician has to be a person devoid of principle and utterly wit out respect for any promise he may have made to his constituents, otherwise he can get no suck at the public teat.

When you meet a person who denies the existence of God, the divinity of Christ or the inspiration of the Bible, don't take up any time with such a person. They are either insincere or have a loose screw in their dome. You waste time to argue with either class.

The old original "dog days" begin on July 28 and go out on Sept 6. They are named from a red star that rise above the southern horizon on July 28 and sets on Sept. 6 and is called the dog star. Look up your astronomy and see for your self. So far as affecting the weather is concerned "dog days" do not mean anything.

If it takes money to make the mare go a great many of us could not even start the colt.

The Ohio republicans are going to find it a hard mateer to keep the southern negroes up there long enough to vote them next year. Lots of them are breaking away and returning already and the zero weather will send back the rest.

You can make the type say anything you please, but your reputation is liable to suffer unless you can back up what the type says with facts.

MR. CURRY WRITES

Clanton, Ala., July 23, 1923

Editor Chilton County News:

A newspaper controversy between you and myself, anent the abolishment of the County Court, would serve no good purpose and I disclaim any desire for such a controversy but I can not refrain from making a very brief reply to certain comments upon the Notice of Public Meeting to be held in the court house on Saturday July 28th and also my position upon the question of abolishing the County Court, which comments appeared in your recent issue. I handed you the Notice of the Pubilc Meeting at the instance of a large number of citizens—Democaats and republicans—which you intentionally or carelessly failed to publish the signatures there to, accurately, but we appreciate what ever coutersy you extended to us by giving us the space you did give us. I do not concur with you in your statement that "free for all mass meetings have an unsavory reputation in Chilton County." It has been the judgement and experience of men in all times, that the peaceable assemblage of the citizens for the consideration and discussion of any measure affecting the interests of the public is the safer and better way of approaching a correct solution. This is far preferable to having one or two jobless individuals pussy-footing around with a pocketed petition and securing the signatures of worthy citizens thereto, by falsehood and deceit. Chilton County supplies no exception to the two methods. At the Public Meeting on next Saturday, Mr. Middleton and myself will submit our reasons for opposing the abolishment of the County Court, to the citizens present. If those who are demanding its abolishment have among their number as many as two men, no matter who they be or whence they hail, who desire to subm[illegible] any reason [illegible] Court [illegible] Would we abolished such two men are hereby not only invited but urged to be present and let the people hear them. Replying to your other comment in which you express regret that I have seen fit to "line up against the organized democracy of my home county", permit me to say that when soever a few spiteful individuals contrive together to do the people of my home county a serious hurt in order to feed their own selfish aims, I decline to co-operate with them and sticking the label of "organized democracy" upon their scheme does not, for me, relieve it of its objections.

Your friend and fellow Democrat

THOS. A. CURRY

We agree with Mr. Curry in the matter of a newspaper controversy between him and ourselves. So far as his or our personal opinions are concerned, we dare say, very few people would be at all interested.

We desire to correct Mr. Curry in the statement that we failed to publish his notice and the signers exactly according to our copy.

There were the names of two signers of his "call" as handed into us, left off of the article in the paper, but, as we feel sure Mr. Curry already knows they were left off because these parties came in the office, demanded the copy and scratched their names off because they claimed to have misunderstood the object of the "call" and were, in fact, directly opposed to the meeting when they learned the facts. We have no idea that this statement will be news to Mr. Curry, for his long experience as a criminal lawyer has made him quite an adept in construing evidence, especially when facts and sentiment are all against him.

The ripening years seem to work wonders in the fixed opinions of Mr. Curry. During the 20 years we have been a citizen of Chilton County we have known of several "citizens meetings" that did not seem to carry with them the great flood of blessings that Mr. Curry seems to attach to them. One of these meetings we recall in particular when Mr. Curry bolted the organized sentiment of the democrats assembled and left the court house, refusing to even participate in anything of the kind. We are also mindful of the fact, and so is Mr. Curry, that the old convention, or "citizens' meetings", system of nominating candidates, became such famous places for thwarting the wishes of the people and putting over the nefarious schemes for clique of crooks, that we have a primary law now that does away with the evil machinations and boss rule that belongs essentially to the "citizens meetings."

So far as the movement to do away with the County Court is concerned, we believe Mr. Curry was the first person we ever heard suggest that action and, at that time, he even went further than that, and also proposed the plan to abolish the court of County Commissioners and have appointed a Board of Revenue in place of them. He also outlined a plan for accomplishing both of these objects and said he did that identical thing for Shelby county when he was a member of the State Senate several years ago.

The latter suggestion his did not meet with favor among democrats and so it was not adopted.

[illegible] ation of petitions," we would like for him to explain to us how he differentiates between the large number of people who are circulating his petition and those who are circulating one in favor of abolishing the county court. He must have become a beliver in the "divine right of kings" that has for so many years presumed to deny the democrats of Chilton county eve n the right to express an opinion.

We wish to say by way of conclusion, that it would be of much greater interest to the best element of citizens of Chilton County if Mr. Curry would explain the reason of his sudden adherance to the standards of Judge Reynolds, rather than his suddenly formed convictions on matters affecting the 'dear pee-pul."

We think it would also be of great interest if the following questions were answered by Mr.Curry:

1st. Is it not a fact that within the last six weeks you have openly advocated the passage, not only of a Bill abolishing the County Court but also the Court of County Commissioners, and boasted that while State Senator you put such measures over for Shelby County?

2nd Is it not a fact that four years ago, after stating your opposition to the Judge Reynolds Salary Bill, where by he attempted to clean the treasury for $3600.00 during the rest of his term, and promising to hands off, that you accepted employemnt and assisted Judge Reynolds to pass said Bill?

3rd. It is not a fact that you have, within the last two weeks, admitted employment by Judge Reynolds at that time.

FOR SALE:—Store Building and fixtures; also desirable farms for rent or sale. C. A. PATILLO, Billingsley, Ala.

Once for all, let it sink into your head, that so far as we have been able to find out no one in the county has any idea of trying to abolish the Commissioners Court. No Bill of that kind has been printed so far as we have heard of. Great tales like that are being circulated in the same old quarters and in the same old way but the people have learned to pay no attention to such tactics. We are immune at last to that sort of bunk. The ear marks have become too familiar.

We should suppose that 800 signers to a petition asking for the abolishment of the County Court is a sufficient reply to the characteristic misstatement of the Union-Banner that the movement was backed by only five or six back room tricksters. Our neighbor is adding to his reputation for attempting to mislead the people week by week.

HIGH SCHOOL COLUMN

People seem not to like to be kept in the dark concerning school affairs. If the local papers will allow me space I shall endeavor from now until school opens to have a few very timely remarks, judging from my point of view. If at any time you do not agree with me, please write me and show me a better way or a more feasible view to assume.

In the first place, I do not care to hear anyone's useless criticism. If you have anything which you think will help me to give you a better school, then tell me what you think ought to be done. I am not promising to do everything you tell me, but I think I can profit by good suggestions. I also think I can recognize a good suggestion when it is given. I have already gotten several good ideas from the records which Mr. Alverson kept. No man can please everybody, but if a person knows the feeling of a large number, he can please a larger number and also give better service by having had the suggestions.

In regard to the affiliation of the county high school with only five teachers, I can say that if the enrollment is no larger Chilton County High School will be affiliated with all the State colleges, but will not be accredited with the Southern Association of College and Universities. It would take a budget of nine thousand dollars besides general running expenses to put the school on the Accredited list.

I will be at the high school building nearly every day of the week from nine until twelve o'clock. If anyone is in doubt concerning his work, it might be well for him or her to come to find the facts. There are a large number who have conditions. I am checking the records to get a list of these so that I can notify them. All prospective SENIORS are urged to see or write me immediately. I see no chance for some who are probably expecting to graduate next spring It may be that they have credits at other schools. I am willing to do everything that is fair to you and the reputation of the school, but I am not willing for you to take more than I know you are able to do thoroughly. We mean to have a hobby this year, and that hobby is "do well all you do."

All prospective students who live in reach of Clanton are urged to see me next week, if you have not been to the Chilton County High School. On Wednesday I would like to see all First year students whose names begin with A. B. C. D. or E. on Tuesday morning all whose names begin with K., L., M., or N. on Tuesday afternoon, all those whose names begin with O., P., Q., R., or S. on Wednesday morning all those whose names begin with T., U., V., W., X., Y., Z. My reasons for this is to find out what you want to study, so I can begin work on the program for the Recitation Periods for the coming session. If you live an unreasonable distance, please write me what you prefer to study.

On Friday, August 17th, I will give examinations to all who care to try to remove a condition. Unless you have been in a summer school or have been coached by a first grade teacher, whose written statement you must bring you can take on only one subject. If you have had six weeks or more under an approved teacher you may try to make up two Under no condition will I allow you to take an examination on a new subject, you must have had the work in class the time required by law. Note change of date.

If you know of any you think may not see this announcement, please tell them if you think they need to know about it.

Respectfully submitted

THE SECRET OF WHY SOME MEN OBTAIN CREDIT, BUT OTHERS CAN'T

Various Meanings of Credit—The Way Character Begets Confidence and Opens the Way to Trust—Thrift and Honesty the Basis of Banking.

The secret of why some men can readily obtain credit, while others are unable to borrow a cent, is disclosed in the present article prepared by the Committee on Public Education of the American Bankers Association. It tells an interesting story of how a man of forty, of good reputation and fair success, was nonplussed by his inability to borrow and had to pass up a good opportunity.

Banks are said to deal [illegible]. The word "credit" has [illegible] dings. When a man has an account [illegible] amount. When a man borrows money on his note at the bank, he is granted "credit." When a railroad, a manufacturing concern, a town, or a government, issues bonds, it uses its "credit." When anyone buys goods without paying cash, at the time of purchase, "credit" is granted. Without credit, our present day business system could not exist.

Credit is possible only where people have confidence in each other, and confidence can exist only where good character exists. Every successful business man looks upon his credit standing as a most valuable asset, and he maintains it by square dealing. To get credit a man must pay his debts, or it soon becomes known he is not of good character and not worthy of confidence. Those from whom he would buy refuse to trust him and the banks decline to grant him credit. Then come business failure and a long uphill fight to get on his feet again and live down the past.

More Than Honesty Needed

Honesty is not the only factor involved in credit. For instance, Mr. Jones, a man of forty, of excellent morals, who has enjoyed a fair income for many years, sees an opportunity to purchase a business. He requires financial assistance. He calls on a banker and asks for the necessary credit. The banker asks the nature of the business, what it will cost, and what Mr. Jones can command in ready money, or other resources, but learns that he has no money or property of his own.

It is clear that Mr. Jones lacks ability to manage his affairs wisely. He has not had enough strength of character to save money by adapting expenses to income, and therefore has not proved that he could make financial progress. Moreover, if men do not invest some of their own money in the business they usually lack incentive and become easily discouraged. It would be unwise for anyone to assume such a financial risk, and Mr. Jones probably would fail to get credit from the bank. He must give up his opportunity to some one else who has saved money.

Banks are public servants, but that does not obligate them to serve those who are unfair in business or lacking in the great principles underlying success. To be known as a careful and thrifty person is the best assurance that the bank will extend financial help when needed.

Many people think that one should shun debt like the measles. They fail to distinguish between wise and unwise debt. It is wise to use credit, that is, go into debt, to buy a home. Such debt encourages thrift. A student may wisely borrow money needed to complete his education. It is an investment that should pay dividends in greater success. Another wise use of credit is borrowing to buy good bonds, such as Liberty Bonds, paying $20 down borrowing [illegible] and [illegible] which one should never [illegible] money. Never incur a debt in a speculative venture. OF THE PEOPLE WHO SPECULATE, NINETY-FIVE PER CENT LOSE. Neither should debts be incurred to purchase pleasure-giving possessions. Such debts are millstones around the necks of countless families.

Progressive banks adhere to the same standards they exact of their patrons. Their business methods must be beyond reproach. They exclude business of doubtful reputation and have no part in the feverish struggle for sudden wealth. Well-managed banks are regarded with great respect, and hold a place of ever increasing importance.

Some thoughtless persons criticize banks for not making loans more freely but it must be remembered that a bank's business is to receive deposits as well as to grant loans, and it is therefore the trustee of money belonging to others. It must safeguard its depositors' funds and so control them as to be always ready to return them intact upon demand. That requires great care in granting credits.

THE MORTALITY OF SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

The Savings Banks Association of Massachusetts has issued a tabulation made by a mutual savings bank in an average New England town showing that, of the accounts opened during a six months period, 85 to 90 per cent were open at the end of the period At the end of the next six months about 70 per cent were open. At the end of one year about 60 per cent were open; at the end of 18 months about 55 per cent; at the end of three years about 50 per cent; and then the figure rather steadily declined by 2 to 3 per cent of the original number each year. At the end of ten years about 25 per cent of the accounts were still open. After that the changes were very small, mostly on account of death

Federal Reserve Copied

Peru is the first country in Latin America to reorganize its banking system according to Federal Reserve principles by the enactment of the Federal Reserve Act of Peru to develop the country's resources along modern lines of financing. Peru's new banking system is modeled after the United States Federal Reserve, with modifications such as the banking conditions and general financial situation there require. It provides for the creation of a Federal Reserve Bank in Peru. The directorate of this bank is to be composed of nine members, three of whom are to be designated by the Government and the other six are to be elected by the member banks.

GOVERNOR BRANDON CAN STOP IT!

Refusal of the legislature to reconsider the subject of convict leasing puts the decision squarely up to Governor Brandon. The governor asked for and received the authority to terminate the system at any time before January, 1928, at which time it would automatically expire unless further legislative hocus pocus is summoned to its defence. Each day that passes without definate thought and planning to abolish convict leasing lessens the hold of the governor upon the people of this state, for the people have demanded in no uncertain tones that the practice be stopped forthwith. Does the governor doubt this? Then let the governor recommend that the matter be referred to a vote of the people.

It has been said that the opponents of convict leasing have not suggested any feasible plan for the care of the convicts if they should be taken from the private mines. Does that then relieve the governor and the legislature from the responsibility of working out such a plan? The question is its own answer. Not only has the legislature refused and the governor failed to halt this nefarious an d dishonorable practice, but there is no evidence that they have earnestly tried to find any other solution than the one they follow. Why have they not done so? Is it because they put the interests of those who lease convicts above the unmistakable will of the people of Alabama? That is an unwelcome inference, and yet there are thousands who sincerely entertain it.

And yet, the opponents of leasing have suggested a practical plan, several of them, in fact. Mr. Kilby has declared that it can be done and should be done at once; that the state's finances abundantly permit it; that there is employment in state-owned or leased mines, and at Kilby Prison, for the few hundred creatures who are the victims of Alabama's inhumanity. There has been suggested a state convict farm. Has there been any investigation of this possibility? Yet other states successfully operate them. It has been suggested that the convicts be put to work on the state highways. Has there been any serious consideration given to this possibility? Yet this is done sucessfully in other states. Other states have solved the problem. The people of Alabama demand that it be solved here. Why do those charged with public responsibility shirk this duty?

The people are convinced that the reason th e governor and the legislature have found no way of employing the convicts is becaus they have not looked for a way. There is no indication that either the governor or the legislature has in mind any plan looking to the release of the convicts from slavery during the entire future period of the present governor's term of office.

The people are not fooled by the explanations or excuses for convict leasing. Why does Governor Brandon turn a deaf ear to the public voice? Is he perchance listening to another voice not publicly audible?

[illegible] was instituted [illegible] Brothers Mercantile Company in Jefferson circuit court by Marion Whisenant, alleging that his son received permanent injuries while playing in front of the store of the defendants when he picked up a stick of dynamite. Whisenant charges in his suit that the company operates a store on the Argo-Trussville highway and by their negligence his son last April picked up a stick of dynamite and, discharging it, had a part of his hand blown away.

An invitation has been extended to Gen. John J. Pershing to attend the barbecue of Montgomery Post American Legion to be held at Mitchell Dam, the latter part of July. A telegram has ben sent by Gen. YOU CAN NO LONGER BE DECEIVED

We take it for granted that, perhaps, all of our readers have been watching the course of events that have been, and are yet, transpiring in regard to the management of the colored government hospital at Tuskegee.

In short, the circumstances are these: when the representatives of the government were in Tuskegee to locate this hospital, the citizens there frankly told these representatives that a colored personal would be objectionable, not only to the local white people, but likewise to the white citizenship of the South.

Upon this statement of the case these representatives of the government agreed that the management should be composed of white people exclusively and upon this understanding the selection of a site was made and the hospital erected.

It was opened up in due time and a white board of officials were placed in charge and everything moved along peacefully and successfully until President Harding, the acknowledged head and front of the republican party, took it into his head to run for the presidency again and wished to promptly annex the negro vote of the North. Then it was, without any cause of complaint, but with the sole idea of throwing a sop to the negro at the North who could vote, that he proceeded to flagrantly violate the pledge of these parties, who negotiated the question of locating the hospital with the citizens of Tuskegee, and made a mere scrap of paper of that solemn argeement, ignoring alike the pledge of the government and the wishes of all the white people of the south, that he might pander to a horde of negro voters in Ohio. The boldest, dirtiest and most willful insult that could have been hurled in to the faces of every 100 per cent white man of the South.

He did not even spare the republicans of the South, because he knew they were in such a great minority that they could not aid him in his scheme to annex the presidential office again.

It is wonderful to us that even the shrewd schemers and sap suckers of that party in the South can make a premeditated and uncalled for insult like this go down any longer with men whose every instinct and tradition repudiates this brazen affront offered them by their leader.

No southern republican can longer plead ignorance of his party's policy towards the South, nor boast that he belongs to the white man's party. This is too plain and the issue is unmistakable. You must of very necessity change your allegiance or swallow the negro down just like your leader has done.

We know some first class, high toned gentlemen who have in the past espoused the cause of the republican party—men whose true Southern blood is as pure as gold—and we can but feel and believe that all of this class of Southern republicans will in future spurn the party who would thus boldly and without cause trample their most sincere convictions in the dust and hurl a blatant insult at the memory of those brave and true men who wore the gray. They were our fathers. Can we espouse the cause of their foes and aid them in attempting to heap ablovuy on the memory of our sire?

THE TUSKEGEE INCIDENT

The Harding administration, after agreeing with the citizens of Tuskegee before the colored hospital was located there that it should be in charge of a white management have gone absolutely back on that agreement, and President Harding, with his manifest love and predilection for the negro, (and his northern vote,) is proceeding openly to violate the good faith of the National government and is undertaking to force on those people of Tuskegee an out and out negro personal for the Hospital.

Ever since Harding has been rattling around in the presidential chair, his one aim and hobby has been to force upon the South the social equality of the negro. He sees in this Tuskegee incident an opportunity, by violating the good faith of the nation to force upon Southern people the odious equality of his beloved negro friends.

He has ordered the negro, Clayton, who recently relieved a white woman of her job over there and then took cold feet and ran away, to return to [illegible] and [illegible] at the point of the bayonet if necessary. He is not acting in bad faith, but he is trying to open up a question, that if carried out, will plunge this whole nation into revolution. Harding is a serious menace to civilization, and well merits the hatred and contempt of all good citizens for the stand he is taking on this question, and while his policy may win him a few negro votes in Ohio, it will sink him and his memory into shameful oblivion so far as all 100 per cent Anglo-Saxon people are concerned. North, South, East and West. He is togging himself with a shameful stigma that will forever separate him, not only from the presidential chair, but from the respect of all real white people.

No one can predict the outcome of this unfortunate affair, but it is safe to say, that if Harding persists in his policy, the usefulness of the Tuskegee Institute, as well as that of the hospital, will be forever destroyed and he will accomplish his seeming purpose of reviving a reign of race purtred that had entirely disappeared in the South.

Any man who will prostitute the high office of president of this great country to feed his personal spite is a shameful disgrace to a land of freedom and deserves all of the censure that must inevitably follow such conduct.

LOOMING UP

Notwithstanding a few days of very bad weather last week the work on the Methodist church made wonderfull progress.

Mr. Price is erecting one of the most substantial brick jobs for those good people that we ever saw. It is perfect in every detail and will stand the ravages of time for years to come. The laying of pressed brick commenced this week, the greater part of the basement walls having been completed. The basement story will be finished in immation stone and the rest of the building will be of white pressed brick.

The church, when completed, will be the largest edifice of the kind in Central Alabama, and will be subdivided into quite a number of departments to take care of all the various activities of the church. A ladies rest room, a pastor's study, a dining room, a kitchenette and many special class rooms will form part of the equipment.

Announcement is made that the organization of Lee county's latest corporation has been perfected, known as the Piedmont Lumber Company, with a capitalization of $100,000. The officers are: Charles H. Haynes, Cliffside, N. C., president; J. A. Cook, Opelika, vice-president; O. B. Ingram, Auburn, secretary, and W. L. Long, Auburn, treasurer. The new company has taken over the property of C. Y. Young Lumber Company of Auburn and will enlarge the plant with new machinery.

Literally sawing their way into the city jail at Haleyville, thieves made away with some five or six gallons of Alabama corn liquor which had been stored in the jail. Bars over the window were sawed and one of the three men thought to have taken part crawled through and pilfered the moonshine. A man named Todd was the only occupant of the jail at the time. He was offered his liberty but refused and notified officers of the robbery.

In Muscle Shoals City, recently incorporated, and which is located adjacent to nitrate plant No. 2, there are four sub-divisions now being developed. Contracts have been let for 6 miles of improved streets, 11 miles of sidewalk, 7 miles of water mains, 3,000 shade trees, 40 street corner fire plugs, shrubbery, etc. The amount of money involved in this contract is approximately $88,000, in addition to the $50,000 being expended on another subdivision.

After Mrs. Cebe Weathers of Walker County, it is charged, had drawn a shotgun on officers who entered her premises in search of liquor, her whole family, including her husband, were apprehended by Deputy Sheriffs W. L. Head and Harvey Davidson, they were taken to Jasper and the father and mother were lodged in jail. The children were taken in custody because there was no one to care for them. No charge was made against them.

Validity of the law enacted by the legislature of 1921 providing for libel suits against non-incorporated societies will be tested upon a motion filed in Montgomery circuit court. The suit is in the case of W. W. Spruell of Selma, asking $50,000 upon the claim that he was expelled from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Spruell was expelled upon the charge of being a strikebreaker.

Mrs. Lou McKay, 69, wife of J. H. McCay, one of the best known planters of Coosa county, was burned to death in her home while attempting to start a fire to prepare the noon meal, Mrs. McKay, a semi-invalid, was found dead in her chair as result of burns sustained when clothing was consumed. The husband discovered the body when he came to his home to aid in cooking the noon meal.

After three years of agitation, work has been started on the new Jackson County High school building at Scottsboro, with W. P. O'Neal, contractor, in charge. Parts of the old building are being torn away, parts are being repaired, while new class rooms and home economics laboratories are being built. The old auditorium is undergoing a change, with the addition of new seats and a new stage.

The Twin Cities of Albany and Decatur, Alabama, will be united as a single municipality after a decade of enmity by the terms of a bill being drawn for introduction into the Alabama legislature and which will in all likelihood pass. The measure, it is understood, will create one city which will be called Decatur, the older of the two municipalities, until the people can vote on a name.

Hale county is up in fighting clothes at the failure of the highway commission to start a federal aid project in the county. It is one of three counties in the state where no road projects have been started, it is said, and the Civitan Club of Greensboro has directed a telegram to President John A. Rogers of the commission, protesting at the delay in getting work under way in Hale.

Alabama coal production for the first half of the year is the greatest in five years. The half year's production exceeds that of 1922 by 17 per cent and that of 1921 by 52 per cent. The production of coal for the first half of 1923 has been 9,737,000 tons. This compares with 8,370,000 tons in the same period of 1922, an increase for this year of 1,367,000 tons, or 17 per cent.

A NEW CLANTON INDUSTRY.

Monday morning, bright and soon, we were surprised to see several drays loaded with saw logs passing through town.

Upon investigation we learned that Mr. Walter Jones had put in a saw mill down near the Jno. M. Robinson planing mill and was proceeding to cut lumber right here in town.

We expect he can scrap up quite a lot of scattered timber around near town and we hear that he is in the market to buy all that offers whether in large or small quantities.

MUCH IMPROVED

The many friends of Mr. J. H. McDonald, proprietor of the McDonald Mercantile Co., will be glad to learn that he has returned much improved in health, from a sojourn of several weeks at Lakeland Fla.

He is back on the job now and hopes to be entirely recovered from his very severe attack of rheumatism in a short time.

PROSPEROUS BUSINESS

The firm of Jno. T. Ellis and Son has demonstrated the fact that Clanton is the place to prosper.

They are comparatively new comers here but they have established on a prominent down town corner a real first class city filling station and made it pay.

They are also making a splendid success as local sales agents for the Buick Motor Co., and through their agency the Buick Car, is becoming a common sight on our streets.

They will also be wholesale agents for the Waiford Oil Co. and will be filling this section full of Woco pep and other products of this Company as soon as a siding for them on the railroad is put in.

A real newspaper is run in the interest of the general public and is not an organ for the purpose of grinding some individuals axe.

If you lived in a community where you could catch all the fish you wanted, where you would not need any clothes except the skins from animals that you killed, where nature supplied your wants for eating and sleeping and keeping warm—without something to steal, you would not be happy or comfortable. "Man shall not live by bread alone." He should have music, books, pictures and automobiles; play games; have entertainment. These things make civilization.

A man and his family could exist or live on very few things, but he must have railroads to bring to him the more complex things—the articles that give him happiness and pleasure. No matter where you live to-day in America, you can enjoy life just as much as if you lived in New York City, or any other population center. The railroads bring these things to you.

Anything that will hamper the railroads and prevent them from continuing to render good service.

River Improvement
Power Development
Flood Control

Top—Lock 12 power dam, Coosa River, developing 110,000 hp. of electricity
Left—Lock 17, Warrior River, for passage of boats.
Right—Proposed Cherokee Bluffs storage dam, Tallapoosa River.

The first and most comprehensive scheme ever devised, for the full utilization of the water resources of a river system, was designed by Major H. B. Ferguson, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, following his survey in 1909 and 1910 of the Etowah, Coosa, Tallapoosa and Alabama Rivers in Georgia and Alabama.

Congress had repeatedly refused to appropriate the millions of dollars necessary to make these streams navigable. The demand became insistent that private capital be induced to build power dams, which would open navigation at no expense to the State or Government. Congress then sought a solution of the problem by directing an—

*"examination for the improvement of the navigation of said rivers * * * and * * * investigations necessary to determine whether storage reservoirs at the headwaters of said rivers can be utilized to advantage, and if so, what portion of the cost of any such improvements, including reservoirs, should be borne by owners of water power and others."*

THE FERGUSON PLAN

Major Ferguson's report recommended power and navigation dams of such height and at such locations as would carry navigation over the rapids, with locks for the passage of boats, and for dams in the headwaters for the storage of destructive flood waters, which could be released so as to give a steady flow in the rivers below, so as to —afford from six to nine-foot navigation the year round; —permit every gallon of water to be converted into electric power, and

Under the co-operative plan of development suggested by Congress, the cost to the United States alone of carrying out the Ferguson plan was estimated to be in excess of $15,000,000.

Major Ferguson's plan was approved by the Government Engineers, but they refused to recommend to Congress that the Government undertake its part of the work. The development of these rivers thus devolved upon the shoulders of private capital.

Further studies of the Ferguson plan have been made by Government Engineers from year to year, and some modifications made in same; but it is essentially being carried out as originally proposed.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THIS RIVER SYSTEM IS NOT, AND CANNOT BE, HAPHAZARD OR PIECE-MEAL. THE FERGUSON PLAN PLACES THE SYSTEMATIC DEVELOPMENT OF THESE RIVERS TWENTY YEARS AHEAD OF ANY OTHER KNOWN RIVER SYSTEM.

EACH PROJECT MUST BE AT THE LOCATION AND OF THE HEIGHT CONTEMPLATED IN THE GOVERNMENT-APPROVED FERGUSON PLAN; EACH MUST BE APPROVED BY ALABAMA PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION; A 50-YEAR LICENSE MUST BE ISSUED IN EACH CASE BY THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION; AND THE LAWS OF ALABAMA AND THE UNITED STATES MUST OTHERWISE BE COMPLIED WITH.

particularly good. The 1913 mortgage is now due,—20,000 marks are to be paid. Marks are quoted 120,000 to the dollar. Twenty-thousand marks, one-sixth of that, therefore equal one-sixth of a dollar,—16 2-3 cents. On the theory that "a mark is a mark," the debtor could wipe off his $5,000 mortgage for 16 2-3 cents,—less than the value of a dozen eggs.

• • •

That is, he can unless the pipe dream comes to a sudden end. For one thing the German courts are ruling that the theory "a mark is a mark" doesn't go,—that a debtor has to give back a fair equivalent for what he received and that present paper marks worth 120,000 to the dollar are not the fair equivalent of former gold marks at four to the dollar.

• • •

Furthermore all pipe dreams are too good to be true. They are not what they seem. The smoke is wearing off in Germany and they are coming down to earth with a dull thud. It is beginning to be realized that the net result of a paper money nightmare is that producers are robbed and speculators enriched. Farmers are unable to raise prices for their products fast enough to keep up with the falling purchasing power of unsound money. The value of such money slips away from them like a handful of dry sand. It brings back to them less in purchases than they gave of their products to get it.

• • •

The farmer as a result can't make ends meet and when he gets into difficulties the unsound money speculator steps in and buys up mortgaged farm lands cheap—and thus it is mostly the speculator who profits by paying off the mortgages with currency worth less than a dozen eggs,—unless the courts stop him.

• • •

More than that, if farm mortgage debt can be paid off with almost worthless currency, so can corporations pay off their bonded debt,—the bonds in which many a farmer's savings, and many a widow's and orphan's inheritance, are invested.

• • •

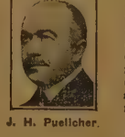
Before the war, with marks worth 24 cents gold, the deposits of the thrifty in German savings banks were worth over five billion dollars. Today, although these deposits have multiplied many fold in terms of marks, their real value is only about half a million dollars gold. That is what a "loose money" plan does for common folks.

• • •

Pipe dreams are wonderful while they last—but shattered health, misery and despair are the final penalty. The ones who profit are the dope sellers. Unsound money is a pipe dream—and the penalty is economic ruin, misery and despair for the majority. The ones who profit are the speculators.

"JUST LIKE DADDY," AN ECONOMIC FORCE

By J. H. PUELICHER
President the American Bankers Association.



J. H. Puelicher.

"Like Daddy"—these two words, that express the imitative nature of children, occur to me as I think of our parental responsibilities in respect to both the thriftiness and the thriftlessness of our boys and girls. The accent belongs on both aspects of the case, for we have yet to find a person who is the perfect example of thrift.

Even Ben Franklin admitted his lack of attainment after his years of self-admonishment and self-criticism—and his temptations were not so great as those of today. Every reader will admit his deficiency in thrift. So will I. And what of our children? Will they copy us? Will their attitude toward thrift be "like Daddy's?" Will it be thrifty or thriftless?

It will at least be largely influenced by it. The thrift of the next generation is in the hands of the present. If our children are "out of hand" on their habits, whom have we to blame but ourselves?

Remember this: The next generation will be subject to the same laws of economics, the same rules of success, the same principles of happiness, as prevail today. A habit of thrift is one of the best possible characteristics we can mould into our children's natures during their habit-forming years. Its value will be apparent throughout maturity, whatever their lot, whether at the helm of large enterprise or steering the more humble affairs of a home.

Thrift will be the basic principle in the economic life of our nation and its system of producing and exchanging commodities. Thrift is always both of social and of individual advantage. Each day finds us expanding both in breadth and in depth of our resources of enjoyment and our opportunities for service as we practice thrift.

But how shall we bring about habits of thrift? Is there any other way than by teaching, whether by direct precept or by the unconscious example of our own habits, continually impressing themselves on the receptive minds of the young?

"Like Daddy" expresses one of the most powerful social and economic forces there is.

It is announced by Senator John Craft of Mobile that the highway from Clanton to Selma has been placed on the map and sent to Washington and will be one of the roads to be built on the Federal aid plan

CENTRAL ALABAMA HOSPITAL

Dear Sir:

We are proud to report to you that the Central Alabama Hospital is progressing nicely. We now have the electric elevator installed and it is a very useful improvement indeed.

One of the main things that we desire to call to your attention is the individual help that each and every stockholder can be to the hospital.

A few days ago one of our stockholders sent in a man with appendicitis from Helena when it was much nearer to Birmingham. He was pulling for the hospital and helping the patient as well, for the patient was given as good attention as could have been gotten anywhere, and for less money than at most any other place

Now suppose that each one of our seventy or more stockholders should influence just one patient to come to the hospital who would have gone elsewhere in the next twelve months. As a stockholder, it is your duty to yourself to do this and we trust that we shall make the service so good at all times and in every way that it will be your duty to your friends and yourself likewise

Last month was about the best month we have had. Our expenses were exceptionally low and our income was one of the best since beginning

You own stock in the hospital just as you own an interest in your other business. Let's put our shoulders to the wheel and make it grow day by day, in every way.

Yours respectfully,
DR. V. J. GRAGG, Pres.

NOTICE

On Saturday August 11, 1923 you are invited to spend the day at the Isabella School house. The purpose of this is for the dedication of the new Vocational Agricultrial School building and we expect to feed well all who attend. Speakers will be present to address the people on this occassion and we extend a cordial invitation to all to be present with us on that day. Announcements of speakers will be made later.

J. Bice Says Something

Editor Chilton County News

Dear Sir.—I notice the Union-Banner has a good deal to say about the report of the State Examiner

The report was no more than what was expected. No one doubted Judge Reynold's books, but here is what the people want to know where is the money? I will ask the Union-Banner to answer this. How is it that Chilton County, on January 1st, 1923, owed $50,000 more than it owed six years ago when Reynolds took over the Probate office if, as the Union-Banner says, the Report is without equal in the State of Alabama.

In regard to the County Commissioners, there is scarcely any work been done on the bridges and what has been done is worth nothing Very little road work being done. More taxes being collected than ever before. What goes with the money? He don't balance the county books, and report how the county stands financially and he did not find the last bond of the Treasurer.

You can see now why I wanted my bond cancelled when I was put out of the treasurer's office

Why do the people fall out over politics What do they get out of it? The money is what the politician want. The "dear pee-pul" are awful good until they get in office and then what do "dear pee-pul" get out of it?

General fund, balance on hand January 1st 1923	$2,[illegible]67
Cash received January 1st to June 30th 1923	$46,885.21
Total received in General fund to June 30, 1923	$49,255.48
Special road funds balance January 1st 1923	$419.10
Cash received from January 1st to June 30th 1923	$22,477.53
Total received in road fund Jan. 1st to June 30 1923	$22,896.63
Total received in six months for the two funds	$72,152.11
Received in fine and forfeiture fund from January 1st to June 30th six months	$3,418.28
Total received from the these funds	$75,570.39
Suppose the same amount is paid in in the next six months, multiply by 2 Total amount for one year is	$151,140.78

Cant the people see that the county is not managed on an economical basis else there would be money to work the roads and build bridges? Something rotten in Denmark, but no one but Lewis can manage the county affairs.

As to the County Court, I have always been opposed to it. It is a menance to the county. We have a Circuit Judge elected by the people for sole purpose of having and handling litigation. Why should we pay another man to hold Court? I can't see it the way the Union-Banner does.

I am honest in my belief that the abolishment of the county court will save money to the county. Besides, we will have a judge who does not know everybody in the county and who will have no incentive to pay political debts ar build up political favor through the rulings of his court. I will give you a case in point. Two men were caught by the Sheriff with a five gallon keg of whiskey. One was fined $50, the other one $150. There must have been some feeling somewhere. The one with the larger fine in this case was less guilty than the other, while both plead guilty of violating the prohibition law. The court records will bear me out in my statement of this case.

The Union-Banner says that Judge Deason left the county so far in debt that we can hardly ever get out. Lets se about that. When Deason went out he left us 34 miles of splendid highway through our county to show for his indebtedness. Lewis has had two times as much money to spend in his term as Deason had and he put the county $50,000 further in debt and he left nothing whatever to show for it. Is that economy?

With the money coming into the coutny treasury now, and that will continue to come in on a rapidly increasing ratio, if it was properly and economically expended, in 12 years a sinking fund could be established to take care of the $200,000 bond issue, and at the same time, every public road and bridge in the county can be properly taken care of. Business methods honesty and good economy can easily do this. How long will the people of Chilton county be blinded?

STOCKHOLDERS MEET

The annual meeting of the Stockholders of the Central Alabama Hospital was convened last Tuesday morning.

The report of officers for the past year was made and the showing was extremely gratifying. The building and grounds have been completed and the hospital is on a paying basis.

Election of officers for the incoming year was had and resulted as follow: V. J. Gragg President, G. C. Wood, Vice-President, T. E. Wyatt, Treasur, Dr. T. J. Marcus, Secretary. A Board of Directors was elected as follows: J. Q. Wade, M A. Gore, C. B. Cox and Dr. N. S. Johnson.

The installation of an electric elevator and the beautifying of the grounds were among some of the valuable improvements made recently.

The work of the hospital was declared absolutely satisfactory and all the stockholders present expressed themselves as pleased with the progress so far.

GOOD, IF TRUE

An official announcement is made this week that the contract for building the 34 mile stretch of the State Highway across Chilton County will be let out in August.

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick" and we have looked so long and anxiously for this good piece of news, that even now we can not rejoice as we otherwise would if we had not so often been disappointed

This is a voluntary announcement sent out by the Highway Commission and, we guess, it means what it says

At the rate the money is being spent unless we get our section pretty soon it looks very much like we stand to lose altogether.

We would have supposed that the most important road building project in the State would have been to construct this north and south tourist route throught the State. It looks like some continuous system of road building would have been much more useful than to have just dropped in a little isolated ten or fifteen mile section at widely separated points.

By far the greatest amount of road traffic in our state passes north and south and a large per cent of the northern people who travel that route are potential home buyers for the south. We can't sometimes always understand the methods of our higher ups.

SAD ACCIDENT

Dr. J. B. Marlar, of Billingsley, who was in town Monday tells us that his wife fell from the back porch of their house Sunday and suffered a broken limb between the ankle and knee.

The many friends of this estimable lady will be grieved at her misfortune and wish for her a safe and speedy recovery.

MODERN SURGERY

Dr. Gragg Operates Successfully Without Chloroform

Quite recently the daily press and the scientific journals were full of a surgical exploit performed by a very noted surgeon without putting his patient under the influence of any sleeping portion, or administering any drug at all.

Among surgeons the performance was considered a wonderful imovation on old time methods, likewise much safer for the patient, leaving the subject free from nausea and the other disagreeable effects that follow the use of anesthetics.

Dr. V. J. Gragg, as is his custom, immediately investigated this new and better way of performing operations, and becoming convinced that it was a real advancement along the lines of modern surgery, made himself proficient in the new method at once.

Last week Mr. T. L. McKee was brought to the local hospital, suffering from a chronic attack of appendicitis that demanded prompt attention Dr. Gragg was called in to operate and he proceeded, by the application of local anethesia to perform the delicate job, while Mr. McKee was perfectly at himself and joined in the conversation of the attendants while the work was going on. After the operation he said he felt fine and wanted them to allow him to get up and walk to his room.

This new surgical departure, as near as we can explain it, is a system of local "blocking" of the affected parts that deadens the nerves in that locality and renders the operation painless.

What we especially want to call attention to is the fact that our local hospital keeps right up to the minute, and Boston and New York can not monopolize on new discoveries. We congratulate Dr. Gragg on the splendid success he made of this new method, also Mr. McKee on being able to receive its benefits.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL OPENS

Notice is hereby given that the Clanton Grammar School will open on Monday, August 27th. The incidental fee will be the same as it was last year. We are opening this school a little earlier than has been customary in order that it will not close at the same time that the High School closes. You will find that the price of text books has advanced about 20% since last year. Let me ask that each patron make as much preparation as possible for the opening of this school in order that we may get to work with the least possible delay

A GENERAL VACATION

It used to be the custom for churches to give the pastor a vacation while the members remained on the job and kept the home fires burning

We have changed that a little in Clanton. We sent our preachers off according to schedule, and we hardly know what we told them when they left, but we have all gone on a vacation too so far as church services are concerned, for the quietest places in Clanton now on Sunday are the church houses. "When the cat's away," etc.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

The work on the railroad bridge is moving steadily forward. Some of the superstructure is now in place and it begins to look good.

Watermelons rinds parked out in the back lots and alleys are not very conducive to good health, neither are the odors that arise from them as pleasant as the scent of violets.

There must have been some very careless management on board the steamer Henderson that permitted the poisoning of President Harding of the grave of spoiled food.

The more pernicious a weed is and the longer it is permitted to grow the more difficult it is to uproot. The same is true of evil political systems.

Summer will soon be gone and the only reason we can find for rejoicing at the fact is that these perstiferous garments called B. V. D's will have to go into winter quarters.

The 34 mile highway to be built across Chilton County is estimated to cost $1,000,000. Clanton should get a good part of that money while the work is going on.

The same sentiments and passions that were built in to Adam and Eve live in every human being that has been born since. You know their history and you can guess the rest.

The United States Senate will have a democratic majority when the next session opens. The lower house will have a very small republican majority. Not a very pleasant prospect for President Harding.

One good thing about political wrangles is that in after days the truth will always live on but falsehood passes away like chaff. Truth will serve you in the years to come, falsehood will rise up and smite you.

The school bill before the legislature now intending to go still further into the home control of children is wrong in every particular. The compulsory law we already have is an evil that has already done incalculable injury to the morals of the children and the respect for schools by the public.

JUST LISTEN

Last Monday morning, when the good little woman at home was debating whether she should serve gravy and bread or bread and gravy for dinner, the question was happily settled for her by our good friend, J. M. Curlee, who arrived on the scene and presented us with a mess of the finest roasting ears we have seen this season. The full moon did'nt have a thing on our face as soon as we got upon that dinner table. We discovered out that we are still able to stand a square meal—when we can get it.

Many, many thanks.

A GOVERNMENT SHOW

The educational picture show put on by the United States Department of Agriculture, at the Wadesonian Theatre, one night last week was a dandy. The films were fine and the lessons taught were timely and true.

The main thing being featured was cattle tick eradication and the information to be derived was valuable indeed.

The government man who had charge of the demonstration made some timely remarks in regard to the local tick conditions there that it would be well for our people to remember and heed. He told them that tick eradication was entirely a matter controlled by Uncle Sam and the longer people refused to obey the law the longer they might expect to be annoyed by United States officers and the higher would go their taxes to foot the bill.

He truly said that you could not outwit the government and that the government would never stop the fight until the cattle fever tick was conquored.

"YOUTH MUST BE SERVED"

You see the Chilton County News is not entirely alone in its position on the regulation of automobile traffic. Here is what the Age-Herald, of Birmingham has to say in regard to some of the disgraceful performances that are pulled off continually by people who need more decency in their system and less of the Darwinian brute.

There is an old saying, "Boys Will Be Boys," which has been employed from time immemorial to explain or excuse the pranks, vandalism or 'general cussedness" of youngsters needing post graduate courses in the woodshed. Now comes the more up-to-date apology of "Youth Must be Served" for the high-strung young fellow in dad's high power car who drives to the door of his chosen one, honks his horn, and releases his siren until the neighbors, who imagine that they are entitled to protection from public nuisances, are compelled in self-defense to leave the veranda and hunt cover elsewhere. To the youngster this is a free country where nobody possesses rights or privileges that need respect. Why should he be required to walk several feet to the door? Why should he consider or perhaps the seriously ill who are trying to go to sleep? "Youth Must be Served."

And when he returns at 3 a. m. from the "peppy" dance with his adored, why should he not churn his motor half an hour while saying good night? What right has any old fogy to protest if he slams his car doors, grinds his gears, and stirs up the whole neighborhood with a few loud bawls, a deafening back-fire or two and other startling sounds? Should he be restrained from raising all the cain his impulse and lack of breeding suggest, because there are some dumb bells who prefer to retire before the small hours? "Youth must Be Served."

There are a good many out-of-date folks in every city and town whose patience is sorely taxed by youngsters who imagine that the world was made for their special and personal benefit, pleasure or convenience. These youngsters cannot understand how anybody else should possess nerves, much less rights, moral or legal. But the people are not at all opposed to the idea that 'Youth Must Be Served," provided that it be in the form of a police summons to pay for damage while under the spell of enthusiasm or a mania to attract attention. It matters not that this sort of spirit is a long step towards the development of that disrespect for law and the public peace, so widely charged against the American people. "Youth Must Be Served."

SHOULTS NOTES

The barbecue here was just fine. A large crowd being present and every body seemed to enjoy the day. Quite a nice sum was taken in to help build and repair the church here.

Mrs. J. S. Bowden and little sons, Junior and Mac, of Birmingham arrived last Saturday evening to spend several weeks with relatives of this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Gentry were visitors of Mr. and Mrs. Mood McGee last Saturday night.

We have had quite a lot of rain the past week and you bet the grass and boll weevils are growing. Tho in spite of all the rain we have been able to enjoy some nice water melons.

A party was given at the home of Miss Eva Hall on last Saturday evening. Miss Bertie Hall is at home to spend a few days. She has a position in Montgomery and we are very glad to have her visit us.

Mrs. L. C. Sewell has been ill for the past several days. Tho we are glad to say that she is improving some now.

Miss Myrtle McAfee was back in our community last Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Jessie Perry of Montgomery, is visiting her mother at this place. Before her recent marriage she was Miss Jessie Latham.

We enjoyed the moving picture show here last Thursday night and we hope it will impress a new idea upon the minds of many about the "cattle dipping question."

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Sewell of Maplesville visited Mrs. S. C. Sewell last Sunday.

THE ONLY "SURE THING" IN THE INVESTMENT FIELD

"Success in life depends upon the investments made of talents and time," says an article on investing prepared by the Committee on Public Education of the American Bankers Association. "Future return will be gain or loss, according to these investments. That is a law of life which controls investment of money, just as it controls investment of talents." The article, which is particularly timely in these days when so many are being robbed by fake investments, continues:

In the business sense, the word investment relates to the use of money in acquiring ownership of property. Ownership may represent entire possession of property as of a home; partial ownership as holding stock in a corporation; or conditional ownership as in the case of buying a mortgage or a bond. When a person makes an investment in bonds, he is really loaning his money to the government or corporation issuing them. He will receive the interest which they earn as long as he owns them, or until they are paid off.

Ownership of great corporations is vested in individuals who have invested money in their stock or bonds. Many people regard the ownership of the United States Steel Corporation, for example, as differing from the ownership of, say, a small workshop. Yet investors in shares of Steel Corporation stock are entitled to the same rights, under the law, as the owner of the workshop. In the corporation, the owners hold certificates of stock as evidence of their investment, whereas the owner of the little workshop holds a deed as title to his land.

Capitalistic Laws Protect Investors

Because the laws stand for the equal protection of all investors, it is possible and profitable to make good investments. It gives an incentive to work hard and to invest. The person who wishes to invest must first work and accumulate funds with which to do so.

Bonds are always secured by mortgages on the lands, buildings or other property of the corporation for which the money has been used. When a bond matures the money must be repaid to the owner of the bond.

All investors are a part of a great financial system which gathers up and puts to work the wealth of the country for the mutual benefit, prosperity, and well-being of all. In America, it is possible for any one who is willing to pay the price of self-denial and hard work, to be an investor. Good investments made in early life by saving such small sums as may be possible, lay the foundation for providing the comforts of later years, when it is harder to earn a livelihood and when poverty often becomes the condition of those who have not practiced thrift in youth.

It is not wise for those without experience to undertake to make investments of their money without guidance by those who know. Many companies are constantly being organized to promote unsound schemes, referred to as "wild-cat." There are always solicitors ready to relieve people of their savings by the promise of big returns. The lure of great wealth is always a temptation by which thousands of thrifty people are deprived of hard-earned savings every year. Widows and orphans who have inherited money are frequently sought and made the targets of these fake-stock salesmen. Misery and suffering are the usual results.

Greed Defeats Safety

Many people with small means also lose money because they insist on a high rate of interest on their investments. Safety of principal should be considered above large returns in interest or dividends. Small investors should never buy high-rate, speculative investments, in which there is a great risk, but should stick to those which pay a fair rate and which are known to be safe.

To know whether an investment is worth buying the investor should go to a banker, or a successful business man in whom he has confidence, get his opinion and act in accordance with it. In all probability this will mean the difference between successful investment and total loss of his money.

The banker deals with investments every day and desires to give all the help and information he can, and the business man has learned by experience the need of caution and careful judgment. They believe one should have a clear understanding of an investment before it is purchased. They know the need for avoiding stock promotion schemes and get-rich-quick propositions which in many cases have brought poverty and suffering. While many states have passed laws aimed to protect the public against promoters of fake investments, thousands of people annually fall victims to their wiles, because they fail to seek advice of those experienced in making investments.

Good advice and temperate expectations mark the only road to safe investment and an assured income. There is no other certain way.

HOW A RIP-ROARING RADICAL WAS TAMED

By JOHN OAKWOOD,

The best story of the taming of a radical I have ever read is told by A. B. Farquhar in his book "The First Million the Hardest." It throws more light on the meaning of capitalism and the futility of socialism than a library full of books on sociology, economics and politics. Here it is as Farquhar tells it:

"The best antidote for acute economic insanity is ownership of property. My favorite example is Otto Steininger. He was one of my first employees and was a rip-roaring anarchist. He insisted that all wealth came from the workers and therefore should go back to the workers. He was particularly bitter against his landlord and hardly a week went by that he did not announce that he had definitely decided that he would like to shoot the landlord the next time he came around for the rent. Finally I asked him smilingly after one of these outbursts:

Buy, Don't Shoot

"'Why don't you buy your own house instead of shooting your landlord? Then you would not have to pay any rent. If you do shoot him you may get into trouble.'

"He did not think much of the idea apparently but in a day or two he asked me how he could buy the house. I answered: 'That house can be bought for $800. You are getting good wages. I will buy that house for you, take $4 a week out of your wages, and in less than four years you will have it paid for.'

"He went off again. The next time he came back it was with his wife. He said: 'We are going to buy that house but since we have no children you can take $10 instead of $4 a week out of my pay envelope.'

"I bought the house and then Otto's chief concern was to get it paid for, which he did in a little more than a year. There was another house next door to him. In a short while after he had paid for his first house, he sidled up to me and said:

"'I can buy that house next door for a thousand dollars. Now that we have no rent to pay we are going along good. What would you think about me buying that?'

"He bought that house and joined the hated landlord class. Some years later when it was reported that a band of strikers were advancing to shut all the factories, Otto rushed into my office at the head of an excited group of men from the shop yelling:

"'Get us a lot of shotguns and we'll keep those fellows out of here! Those fools expect a man to work and save and then walk in here and take what he has got without paying for it!'

"And that," Farquhar concludes, "I think, is always the way to develop a conservative."

GROWING RECOGNITION OF ADVERTISING'S USE

Advertising first established its place as an economic factor as a sales aid, but as understanding and use of it have increased, its possibilities in other fields have developed until today we find it employed in many forms of service hitherto unthought of. Advertising has long been hampered in its use by precedent, tradition, conventions, and prejudices, which, under analysis and experience, find little to warrant their existence. Gradually the falsity of their claims is being proved.

We were told for many years that it was undignified for a bank or fiduciary institution to advertise, and this edict, born of some superstition of the past, was accepted without question until finally it was intelligently challenged and it was discovered under analysis that there was no sufficient reason for its support. The inevitable conclusion of logic is that, whatever is of genuine use to human beings, whether it be goods or services, can, with truth and dignity, be advertised and sold, and that it is just as proper to merchandise forms of service as various kinds of commodities.

In the logical development of this new understanding of the power of advertising during the last decade, we have seen many of our banking fiduciary and investment institutions actively employing the sales value of advertising in the marketing of their services. In this intelligent use of publicity they are not only increasing their own immediate business returns, but they are also helping to spread a better understanding of financial service and economic fact and theory upon which solid business relations can be built.—Francis H. Sisson, Journal of the American Bankers Association.

MR. CURRY WRITES AGAIN

Clanton, Ala. July 30, 1923.

Editor Chilton County News:

In a former communication, I stated that I believed that a news paper controversy between you and myself upon the proposed bills for Chilton county, would serve no good purpose and expressed a desire to retire from such controversy. However, upon your assuming the prerogative of asking me for a reply to a trio of questions with the assurance that such answers would be of "great interest", I take great pleasure in complying with your request.

1st. It is a fact that I have, for several years, advocated the abolishment of the county court in Chilton County and creating a lieu thereof, a court of limited jurisdiction of civil and criminal cases. I have never at any time, advocated the abolishment of the County Court and leaving the county without a court of any kind in which misdemeanors could be tried, except the Circuit court. It is a fact without questioning, that seventy-five per cent of the violations of criminal statutes in the county are misdemeanors. I have advocated the creation of a Board of Revenue under certain conditions but I have never advocated the passage of such a bill as you and a few others have been advocating for Chilton county. The first time I ever saw your bill was a few weeks ago when upon the invitation of Senator Adams, I attended a "conference" in an upstairs room in a local hotel where were present, yourself, J. P. Hays, Victor Heard, Napoleon Johnson, O. R. Roper, W. D. Speigner, Senator Adams and at his request read them aloud and in the hearing of all, I then and there declared my opposition to them and stated my reasons therefor. Senator Adams thereupon expressed his disapproval of the Board of Revenue bill but was inclined to favor the County Court bill. It was then that Napoleon Johnson offered a resolution directing Senator Adams to forthwith introduce and secure the passage of these bills by the Legislature of Alabama. Victor Heard moved the adoption of the resolution and upon my objection to the motion upon parliamentary grounds and upon the further grounds that the democrats of the county were not favorable to such proposed iniquitous legislation; that the few present had no authority to bind Senator Adams to such legislation, you stated that the Democratic Executive Committee had acted upon these matters and had executed all authority necessary for the adoption of the resolution offered. Senator Adams concurred with me deemed to allow a vote upon the resolution, and the "conference" immediately adjourned. The bill providing for a Board of Revenue not only abolished the Court of County Commissioners and established only temporarily a Board of Revenue by appointment of the Governor, but created a cumbersome and impracticable system of public road working, created new officers to be paid out of the pockets of the tax payers, clumsily divided the county into Commissioners Districts and, as a matter of politics, inflicted a wound upon the democratic party in the county that twenty years of time would not heal. I pointed out these objections to this bill to you, individually and openly and publicly on many occasions. Will you please state how you gained your consent, with full knowledge of these facts, to even intimate that I advocated the passage of this bill but it "did not meet with favor among democrats and so it was not adopted." It is a fact that as a member of the State Senate in 1911, I secured the passage of a bill creating a Board of Revenue for Shelby county which was not even a "sixth cousin" of the bill which was prepared by a Montgomery lawyer, for Chilton county, and which was advocated by you and a few others. As to the County Court bill for Shelby county, I never heard of such a bill until I saw your reference to it in the Chilton County News, in the good year of 1923.

2nd. It is not a fact that I rendered assistance to the passage of the bill which you term the "Judge Reynolds Salary Bill" nor did I have any connector with that bill except in the capacity of an attorney and as such I conducted its litigation to its termination in the Supreme Court of the state. For my services Judge Reynolds paid me a lawful fee, in lawful money and for this I offer no apology to any one, for I am due none. I have never denied this transaction. In opposing the County Court bill, I have "suddenly adhered" to no man's standards. My opposition to this bill is that of a citizen and a taxpayer, solely. I have attended and participated in Public Meetings ever since I was old enough to attend and participate in them and you are the only man I ever heard of who objected to citizens meetings together, in a peaceable manner, and discussing questions of public concern. I never "bolted a democratic meeting" in my life. The occasion refered to by you in your last istue, was in 1916 when a "Citizens Meeting" composed of Republicans, Democrats and Socialist met in the court house for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Probate Judge—Senator Adams having been previously nominated but withdrawn from the race. I, with you, was present at that meeting and I counseled the nomination of a Democrat and upon finding that such would not be done, I withdrew from the meeting-an act that you have upon more than one occasino commended me most highly for doing. That "Citizens Meeting" nominated Mr. LaFayette Popwell, a life long republican and he was placed at the head of the democratic ticket. I, together with hundreds of other good democrats actively supported him. Did you? If you published the Notice of the recent Public Meeting, accurately as the same was handed you by me, with the exception of two names which were "scratched off" by persons who claimed they ddi not understand the facts, kindly explain why you failed to print the names of H. J. Foshee and C. M. Foshee two leading democrats of Maplesville whose names were signed to the Notice refered to. The consumption of so much of your space was not of my choosing but upon your insistance and this is my final appearance in your columns upon the subjects undertaken to be discussed I therefore bid you "au revoir" and wish you good luck in your efforts to dig up something against my public and political record which would discredit me and thereby bring peace to your troubled soul.

Your friend and fellow democrat

THOS. A. CURRY.

TUSCALOOSA GETS BUSY

Recently there was held in Tuscaloosa an enthusiastic meeting to discuss tax exemption for new industries especially textile and kindred mills.

The principle speakers were Hon. C. B. Vernon, State Senator Judge Fleetwood Rice, E. B. Nixon, Manufacturer, Oscar Clarkson, lawyer, and Judge Benard Harwood who has served as a legislator.

Several others closely in touch with the industrial interests of the State and potential wealth hereof, addressed the meeting and aroused enthusiasm.

Judge Harwood asserted that the State had broken faith with those industries that had begun to operate under the tax exemption, especially the Alabama Power Company, and urged that everything possible be done to bring new industries to the State to develop the natural resources. He asserted that he was tired of hearing potential wealth" and urged that resources be developed and then "there would be plenty of potential wealth for coming generations."

It was practically unanimously agreed that all should work for tax exemption on new industries, especially textile mills. Alabama Traveler.

BACK HOME

The members of the Methodist congregation, as well as the citizenship of Clanton, are glad to welcome Dr.C. C. Wilkerson, pastor, back home from his summer vacation.

A large audience went out to hear him at the 11 oclock service Sunday. There was no service at night.

Dr. Wilkerson is deeply interested in the construction of the elegant new church house and was, no doubt, anxious to get home and watch it go forward.

BIG TIMBER DEAL IN PROSPECT

Messers J. E. Robinson and L. C. Callaway left by rail Sunday night for Thomasville, Ga. where they are going to look over a track of several millions feet of long leaf timber which the Robinson Lumber Company, of this place, will most probably buy.

This tract of timber is just across the line in Florida and is, perhaps, the largest single tract of long leaf pine left growing in even that piney woods section.

Examinations for removing conditions will be held Friday, August 17. Entrance examinations come Saturday,August 25th. Registration of all First year students is set for Thursday August 30; registration of Second year, Third Year, and Fourth year Friday August 31. Opening exercises to the public will be held on Friday evening, eight o'clock. August 31st. Lessons will be assigned on the day of registration and recitation will begin on Monday September 3rd.

Books are about thirty percent higher this year, so do not be surprised when the Bookstore tells you the price. I do not think there were any changes made in the course of study, due to the fact that the State will have to adopt new texts next year or renew the contract again.

The Supreme Court has ruled that the special fees must be used for laboratory and shop equipment and material instead of partly for general running expenses as heretofore. This means that the matriculation fee must be raised, for a two and one half dollars fee each term will not take care of the coal, insurance, janitor's salary, repairs and other items of running expenses. The matriculation fee will be three and one half dollars per term. Special fee for library and laboratory equipment will be two and one-half dollars per term. Thus the fees of each pupil will be six dollars ($6.00) per term. I shall appoint three members of the Senior class to keep a check on how the special fees are being paid out. I do not want any pupil to feel like he is paying a fee for library and laboratory and then the money be spent for something else. I have already ordered $175 worth of Chemistry equipment. This will be on hand when school opens. Every dollar that the pupils pay in for equipment is going to be used for that purpose. It is for this reason that I have raised the matriculation fee and the special fees. After the pupils see that there is really being added all the equipment possible to be bought with their fees, I think they will agree with me that it is better to raise the fees and equip the school than to keep them low and have nothing with which to work. The library is considered a "shop" for English department. We hope to make it a "work shop" this year.

The county board is positive in their attitude toward hazing. No pupil will be allowed to register until he or she has signed a pledge that he or she will not indulge in any form of hazing during the entire school year. Anyone who does not live up to his pledge will be dismissed from the school for the rest of the year. There will be no ten day suspension for hazing. I know what hazing is in its various forms. I took mine in the Freshman year of college, but I never did think it was right. After I got out of the Freshman class, I did all I could to keep hazing within reason. It is like the liquor trafic, it is not based on reason and can not be regulated. For this reason I have decided to take a firm stand against it. The students must leave it off or leave school. Parents are cautioned now to let their children understand how they feel about it. If they want them to haze, then send them somewhere else. Chilton County High School has abolished hazing and every body might as well let that point soak in good and deep before school opens. I have heard of a few who say that they are going to haze and that I can not stop it. The sooner they get that idea out of their heads the better it will be for them.

PARENTS: If your children indulge in hazing they will be dismissed from school. If you back them up in it, you will be to blame.

If the space is allowed, I have something else to tell you next week. This is about all you can stand at one time. Read the first paragraph again.

Respectfully submitted

BAPTIST S. S. CONVENTION AT HIGHLAND CHURCH

According to program the County Baptist Sunday School Convention met with the Highland church last Sunday.

A fine attendance is reported and a general good time, fraught with much valuable work, was enjoyed.

Mr. Sid Weldon opened the services at 9:45 a. m. with a devotional service that was most appropriate.

Rev. W. A. Goss then addressed the convention on the "Requirments of a Sunday School Teacher." His talk was able and to the point and was closely listened to and enjoyed by the audience.

Prof. J. L. Johnson and Rev. A. L. Foshee were the next speakers. They spoke on the subject: "The Sunday School as a Factor in Community Life." Both speakers went in to the subject in earnest and made some good and well taken points.

Then came that happy hour when those good ladies out there spread out a feed ample enough for a king and invited everybody to come forward and partake. As usual, this invitation was unanimously accepted and thoroughly enjoyed.

Rev. W. A. Goss opened the afternoon session with a splendid address on the "Value of an adult class in Sunday School.

He was most ably and interestingly followed by Prof Ira Pegues, Prof. J. J. Pickens and Rev. A. L. Foshee in a discussion of our "Personal Responsibility in building a Sunday School." These gentlemen were all well up on their job and the discussion was one of the real features of the session

The beautiful day being far spent by this time, adjournment was had, and the large crowd shook hands made future dates and agreed that the entire meeting was a glorious success and so to their various homes.

SCHOOLS TO OPEN

Later on, if any of you need any very heavy paper to pad your pants with, call and we will try to fit you out.

Then on August the 29 Prof. Ira Pegues will "turn on the juice" at the County High School and start up the work of grading in and organizing the classes for the next term

Vacation days will soon be over now and if you have any cars to wreck banks to rob or trains to derail on your vacation program you better hurry up the job and get ready to do some hard consistent work in trys ing to get an education, for the grind is going to begin then.

A RESOLUTION

To Whom it may concern:

Whereas, the Railroads are transporting in a satisfactory manner the largest amount of traffic ever known, and,

Whereas, the Railroads, through the American Railway Association, individually and collectively are making enormous expenditures for improvements, rolling stock and other new equipment, and

Whereas, the Railroads are doing everything possible to co-operate with the shipping public and urging full car loading and release of equipment and have called upon them to co-operate through regional shippers advisory boards to function with the Car Service Division of the American Railway Association, and,

Whereas, the American Railways are maintaining and improving the most economically and efficiently managed transportation system in the world and for the first time since government control ceased, are earning for their owners a satisfactory net income.

Be it resolved by the Board of Directors of the Thorsby Chamber of Commerce that it denounce any political agitation for Government control or ownership of the railroads for economical and patriotic reasons.

Be it further resolved that it is the position of the Thorsby Chamber of Commerce that the Railroads should be trammeled less by National Legislation and that the matter of arriving at fair and equitable valuation of Railroads should be left with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in Co-operation with the various state Service Commission as provided by law.

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY AND THE PUBLIC

Our Power Policy

It is the policy of Alabama Power Company to develop and distribute electric power so as to make its service available over the greatest possible area; to the greatest possible number of people of Alabama, and at the lowest reasonable rates consistent with a fair and adequate return upon its investment.

Alabama Power Company realizes the part electric power plays in the economic life of our State. It is endeavoring to visualize Alabama's future as well as present needs, and fashion its policy in a broad, constructive way to fit the demands.

In fashioning its policy, Alabama Power Company is actuated by a desire to serve all classes of industry and citizens of our State.

It is constructing its power lines, where practicable, parallel to railroad lines, first because the greatest number of industrial plants and people may be served thereby, and second, because of the fact that some day, perhaps not far off, many of these railroads will be electrified.

It considers it an obligation not only to extend its service to the large cities and towns, the centers of population, but to the villages, semi-rural and rural communities, wherever it is economically feasible to do so. It hopes to be able to extend its service to—

THE MANUFACTURER, that his output may be increased, his costs reduced, his profits enlarged, and that he may be able to compete with others enjoying power service;

THE WORKER, that he may make electricity his servant, to perform his every command at the touch of a button or switch, and be freed from inhuman toil;

THE MERCHANT, that his store and windows may be well-lighted, that his name be flashed by an electric sign, and thus keep pace with others;

THE HOUSEWIFE, that she may be freed from drudgery by the magic of the numberless electric household appliances of today; and

THE FARMER, that his arduous toil may be lessened and his productivity increased by the application of electricity where practicable to his many tasks.

Yet in prosecuting this policy, Alabama Power Company is aware of the difficulties which it will and is now encountering in carrying it out.

The cost of distribution of electric power is in direct proportion to the amount of power and the distance service is to be extended. ALABAMA POWER COMPANY'S RATES ARE PRACTICALLY UNIFORM THROUGHOUT THE STATE. Where the load is sufficient and the distance not too great, it is entirely practicable to extend service without a loss. But in semi-rural and rural communities, where there are few if any manufactories, and business houses and homes are widely scattered, it is a difficult problem to make our service available, except at a loss or an increase in rates, both of which are equally undesirable. The service of communities of this class presents a problem to which we are devoting considerable time with the hope that it may be solved. Our engineers are attempting to devise cheaper yet durable types of construction for rural service.

The helpful and constructive suggestions and co-operation of citizens of Alabama will go far toward hastening the day when the benefits of electric power service will be enjoyed almost universally in our State.

The Big-Six line comprises four models, mounted on the standard 126-inch chassis with 60 horsepower, 3½ by 5 inch motor. They are: seven passenger Touring Car, five passenger Speedster, five passenger Coupe and seven-passenger Sedan.

CREATE STATE COMMISSION

"The crying need of education in Alabama is the destruction of the "State School Machine."

Just like children, we have been listening to those theories until they have gotten into a deplorable financial condition.

"Let's have a State Commission to handle all of our State Schools and all of our common Schools. Let's put education on a business basis for the good of all.

TEAR OUT THE OLD, PUT IN THE NEW

Monday morning bright and soon the hammers began to ring on the old Roper store building just west of the railroad crossing on second avenue and, upon investigation Mr. O. O. Roper informed us that he was going to pull down the present building to the ground and rebuild with a pressed brick and plate glass front and make the building modern in every respect.

This will be another decided improvement in the business district and will furnish a good location for some person who wishes a business house Let the good work go on.

THIS IS THE PLACE

If you want to "race your motor" and try your cut out system. If you want to park your car end-ways cross ways, side ways, horizontally or perpendicularly. If you want to try out your maximum speed and practice up on zigzag and stunt driving, just get on the inside of the corporate limits of Clanton and go to it. It will be perfectly all right. We don't care how you treat 'em here, just so you treat 'em rough. The more noise you make the better we like it, for if an earthquake or an electric storm comes along we would never know the difference.

L. N. HENDERSON OUT AGAIN

It was especially pleasant to us all this last week to see L. N. Henderson out one more time.

Mr. Henderson suffered the misfortune of getting both legs above the knee amputated some of the year and has confined to his bed ever since, just the past few days.

He is still on crutches but can get about [illegible] and with the help of [illegible] can cover a whole lot of ground.

CHILTON COUNTY COURT ABOLISHED

One Source of Expense Chilton County Eliminates

[illegible] the Chilton County Court passed into history

Judge Reynolds convened his tribunal on time, sounded his docket and disposed of such cases as had a plea of guilty on file

Then he proceeded to deliver his valadictory address as Judge of said court. He was followed by Col J. O. Middleton, who in touching terms of regret and in an impassioned and ferid manner pronounced a feeling eulogy over the ashes of this one time militant off spring of too much government.

This sudden denouement came at a most fortunate time for the Judge, for quite a number of "tick cases" were on the docket, so we learn, and you all know what an extreemly live wire cattle dipping is to the Judge, so he shunted them along to the next man. You have to hand it to the Judge for his ability in being able to see the point.

While these last sad rites in memory of a vanished political dream were a little premature, the premonition that prompted them seems to have been correct, for on the following afternoon at about 4 o'clock, the legislature put the legal touches necessary to make this divorcement of the people from the county court a real thing, by passing a bill to abolish the county court of Chilton county by a vote of 63 to 13.

It seems like this is an off year for county courts, as several more are slated to pass into the discard before the legislature adjourns.

We had intended to give some data in regard to the actual workings of the county court in Chilton county for the past two years, but as we have been sick all the week and our mechanical department is pushing us up, we will have to forego that pleasure for this time. The data is on file and perhaps, will be given later.

Suffice it to say that the county court of Chilton county is abolished

STARTED UP

The canning factory has been completed and is now open for business.

We notice several wagons loaded with tomatoes passing through the streets headed in that direction. This has been a very unfortunate season for growing tomatoes and we fear the short crop will have a tendency to discourage some of those who planted for canning purposes this year.

Perhaps we will not have another season like this one in 50 years and we all know that under ordinary conditions tomatoes can be grown here to perfection.

AMERICAN LEGION MEMORIAL SERVICES

In response to a proclamation by president Cavlin Coolidge and the true American spirit of the citizenship of Clanton and Chilton county her citizens will gather at the court house in Clanton Friday August 10th at 2:00 p. m. to pay honor and homage in memory of Waren G. Harding twenty-ninth president of the United States of America who died in San Francisco California on August 2nd.

At a meeting at the court house Monday sponsered by the ex-service men and prominent citizens of Clanton definate plans were formulated for the memorial exercises. Claud E. Marcus former chief Pharmacist U. S. Navy was elected chairman and with the assistance and council of those present Mr. Marcus appointed the following committees to carry to a successful conclusion what promises to be the most impressive demonstration ever held in Chilton county

So enthusiastic were the members of the program committee for a tribute to our chief executive that would reflect credit upon the community that invitations were telegraphed to prominent members of the Bench and Bar of the state to come to Clanton and assist her citizens in this great memorial ceremony. Plans were immediately put into motion for the organization of a large choir of mixed voices to sing some of the favorite hymns of President Harding. Sheriff Tom Littlejohn and John Gore recognized as authorities on sacred music together with Miss Beverly Hester one of Clanton's most prominent musical leaders assures the memorial of a musical tribute that probably cannot be excelled in any other section of Alabama, for Chilton county has long carried the reputation of producing the best harmony in the state.

Even with the unanimous declaration of the committee that the demonstration will be the most impressive ever held in the county they have declared that her citizens must bear in mind that the ceremony is being conducted for one of the nations greatest men and that is is not only the desire of the committee having in charge this program that you come to Clanton Friday to take part but it is your solemn duty as an American citizen, regardless of your political affiliation or religious creed.

As all ex-service men in particular know that the president is the commander-in-chief of the military forces of the nation and that President Harding will be buried with strictly military honors. All ex-service men in the county are strongly urged to be present and wear their uniform wherever possible.

LET EVERYBODY COME

[illegible] memorial services to be held Clanton tomorrow (Friday) as a mark of respect to our dead president should be attended by every citizen of Chilton county who can possibly arrange to get here.

It is eminently fitting that every loyal citizen of these United States could meet on this day, when the body of President Harding will be committed to the grave, in Marion Ohio, and unite in a grand, nationwide memorial service that will astonish the whole world

This is an occassion when even a thought of political differences would be a acrilige. No matter how widely we differ from the dead president politically, that difference has no place in any American's heart on this sad occassion, when we assemble, not so much to pay a personal tribute, but for the purpose of showing our supreme devotion and loyalty to the dead president of our great country.

Let us urge upon every reader of this paper that, if necessary, you make sacrifices to enable you to be on hand tomorrow, to aid in demonstrating the unchanging loyalty of the South to the principles of freedom, as exemplified by Old Glory on land and sea and as exhibited before the world in the Magna charter of this, the greatest nation on earth today.

We hope to see the largest attendance at this memorial service that has ever been before. The occasion is a fitting one and our duty lies in this direction. Come!

CHILTON COUNTY HI

We have been reading with a great deal of interest and appreciation a series of articles being prepared for the local press by Prof. Ira Pegues, the new principal of the High School for the ensuing year.

Prof Pegues is making himself absolutely clear as to the policies to be followed out at that worthy institution during his incumbancy.

In our way of thinking the Professor is eminently right in all of the things and statements he has put forth. Of one thing we are absolutely assured. No patron, pupil or teacher, will take the pains to read his article can fail to understand what will be expected of them under the new administration. The Professor is not only a competent scholar, but he is a man of intensive ideas and ideals and is one of the kind that is not only willing, but who does give the very best that is in him in behalf of any undertaking that he takes hold of.

We bespeak for him the hearty support and earnest cooperation of every well wisher to the cause of education throughout this entire section. The High School under his management will be conducted on a high moral plain, and every student will be accorded a fair and impartial opportunity to develop the very best that is in them.

With the assistance and encouragement that should be given him, Prof. Pegues will make of the High School an institution of learning of which we may all be proud

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, on August 2nd. 1923, President Warren G. Harding, died, and Whereas, our President has designated and proclaimed August 10th, 1923 as a day for prayer and mourning, and whereas it is meet and proper that the citizens of the Town of Clanton, Alabama, should join in carrying out and observing said day in obedience to said proclamation, and whereas our deceased president will be buried on said day

Now therefore I, V. J. Gragg, mayor of the Town of Clanton, Alabama here by designate and proclaim August 10 1923, as a day for prayer and mourning in respect to our deceased president, and I call upon all citizens of the Town and community to join together on said day, at their respective places of worship or at a meeting to be held in the town, for prayer and mourning. I also request that all places of business within the town be closed from 1 p. m. to 3:00 p. m. on said date.

Done this the 7th day of August, 1923.

V. J. GRAGG,
Mayor Town of Clanton, Ala.

REMEMBER THIS

Very often some valued correspondent from the country jerks us over the coals about getting the names of some place or person wrong.

Now listen. These names are perfectly familiar to you, but to us, not knowing any of the circumstances, they are absolutely strange. We can guess at a word in the general right up by the sense intended to be conveyed, but the name of one person will make as good sense in the reading matter as another, so you see we have nothing to guide us in making a guess. We have to shut our eyes and go to it blind.

Now, the obvious thing for all people to do who write for the press is to take especial care in writing the names of people or places and make them absolutely plain. We would much rather have it right than wrong, but we are not always a lucky guesser.

Write all proper names plainly and spell them correctly and we will guarantee to get them just as you want them.

Please put this item away in your memory and maybe the next time you go to bawl the editor out you will think twice before you do it.

DR. ARTHUR JOHNSON RETURNS

We are pleased to note that Dr. Arthur Johnson, who has been absent for quite a while in Chicago, taking special work in the Labratory of Surgical Technique, hao returned to his work here.

He got back home last Monday night and seems to be well pleased with his trip.

CROP PROSPECTS

Reports that come in to us from all over the county indicate that what corn was planted and cultivated is doing fine and will make a splendid yield. Unfortunately the acreage this year is considerably below normal.

Peas, Sugar Cane and potatoes are also said to be in good condition and going fine with an outlook for good yields.

Cotton reports are very unfavorable. The rains and the cloudy weather for the past ten days have given the second crop of boll weevils a fair chance and they are making good of the opportunity. From all directions come the same story,—"the boll weevil is eating us up."

Cotton, as a rule, has developed a good weed and taken on a fine lot of fruit, but the boll weevil is now taking his inning and the forms are falling off by the bushel.

The story will be told now in a few days. This is August 9. In ten more days the cotton crop for 1923 will be made or lost. We can not reasonably count on any thing that is put on after August 25. The fall season will be too near at hand then for cotton to make and mature any appreciable amount of cotton

One good feature about the situation is that the price is already beginning to respond to the situation and cotton is gradually going up.

The wise farmer will save all the hay, and other feed stuffs, possible this fall. Let nothing go to waste for the indications are that we will need all we can save and then some.

As a visible evidence that the city authorities are beginning to take some notice of traffic conditions existing here, we notice this week that some silent monitors at the down town street crossings enjoining people to "drive to the right."

This is good as far as it goes, but for some reason, the most dangerous corner in town—the one fronting the Wilson Hotel—was un marked.

Near accidents and small collissions occur on this corner almost daily and some day we will have a gruesome story of death to write up from that very location.

Luck, Providence or the devil, whoever you wish to ascribe it to, will not always take care of the speed maniacs and criminals who turn around that corner every day

Cars dash around there every day at from 35 to 100 miles an hour and all of the people in that section of town have learned to "stop look and listen" well before attempting to run the gauntlet for their lives.

NOTICE $50.00 REWARD

The Town of Clanton Alabama will pay a reward of $50.00 for the arrest and conviction of the party or parties who stole Street Sign from street at or near Robinson Planing Mill on the night of August 6th 1923. The sign had the following words on it: Clanton Welcome Drive Slowly

J. H. FOSHEE, Chief Police

Mr. Wallace Jones of Birmingham, was down last Sunday on a visit to his mother and friends.

Up Hill—Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

If it takes a K. K. K. visit to properly attend to certain obnoxious and disgraceful cases, then a visit of that sort is badly needed in a few special cases around Clanton.

Between the ravages of an intensive summer cold and the combined attack of 100,000 gnats the editor is working under difficulties this week. If the paper is not up to your ideas, why come in and try it next week yourself.

Even the luscious watermelon seems to have gone out of style in this new order of things. They come in to town as of yore, but they lay around at the markets waiting for a buyer until their phisiogomy becomes as familiar as the face of an old friend.

The corn crop is said to be short. The cotton crop is failing fast. The cane crop is not very heavy and the meat crop is always light, but thank goodness, the possum crop is reported as excellent and the taters are looking fine.

Carpenter Jim Huckabee has gone to Tuskegee this week to begin work on a nice bungalow over there for Mr. W. A. Connolly.

PRESIDENT HARDING DIES

Last Thursday evening at 7 o'clock President Harding died suddenly at his hotel in San Francisco.

The afternoon papers of that same day carried full reports from his sick bed, assuring us all that the crisis in his malady had passed and that in just a few days he would be able to return to Washington. Almost while we were still reading and rejoicing over that good news, the wires brought the awful intelligence that he had passed away. A sudden bursting of a blood vessel in his brain snuffed out his life like the blowing out of a candle.

His remains will not sleep in the historic Arlington cemetery at Washington, but in defference to the wishes of his wife, she will carry him back home with her to Marion Ohio, and there let him sleep near to the old homestead where united they have spent so many happy years together. A simple funeral will take place there tomorrow and what is left on earth of Warren G. Harding, the honored head of the greatest country in the world, will be buried in the home town and among the home folks who knew and loved him most.

The effiency of our system of government was demonstrated by the fact that before another day had dawned after death had made vacant the presidential chair, Calvin Coolidge, our vice president, had been duly sworn in and the reins of government were given into his hands and the old ship of state sailed majestically forward without a jar or the disturbing of a single market either at home or abroad.

President Harding did nothing startling or spectaeular during his administration to attract any special attention, but, so far as he conceived a thing to be right he followed it up.

Towards the South he was unjust from the start, not, we believe intentionally so, but from a failure to acquaint himself with the real conditions before he acted.

His famous Birmingham speech was uncalled for and very unappropriate to the occassion and likewise his determination to ignore the Governor of our State, a large number of leading citizens of the South and the entire population of Tuskegee in forcing a negro management into the government hospital located there clearly demonstrated the fact that he was either totally ignorant of southern conditions, or else he willfully desired to insult the south for personal or political reasons.

As president of the United States we deplore his passing away. As the foremost citizen of Ohio we respect his memory. As the loving husband of the good women who is today plunged into grief we honor his record and deeply sympathize with her, but as the friend of the South we hardly feel like we could sincerely grieve as having lost a benefactor.

OUR NEW PRESIDENT.

The people at large have had very little opportunity to learn anything about the political ideas of Mr. Coolidge. He has filled his place as president of the Senate in a very accept able manner, so far as we know. His rulings have been prompt and decissive. He has the reputation of being a very austere and silent man, taking life seriously and not given to playing either policy as politics.

We notice, since his elevation to the presidency, a manifesto from Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, that charges him with not being the friend of either the farmer nor the laboring class. It is true, that like our former governor, Kilby, he got in bad with the coal miners of his state during the settlement of a strike while he was governor. We rather guess that he is more of an aristocrat and a captilast than he is a farmer or laboring man.

He has some eighteen months ahead of him in which to classify himself. If he can make good the G. O. P. will select him to lead them out of the wilderness as their next standard bearer, if he fails to score he will be put on the shelf for good when he gets through his term. If he can play politics the situation he is placed in will draw him out. It will be interesting, at least, to watch his career.

Our prediction is that the down east capitalists will find in him a willing and ready assistant and that the South and West may sit by and suck their fingers for awhile now.

He is president and the future can only tell, whether he is big enough for the job or not. It takes a real man to be president over ALL the people of this great country.

NEW BUILDINGS PROGRESSING

Notwithstanding the weather conditions have not been very favorable for construction work for the past ten days, the several big jobs going forward here seem to be moving along in a very satisfactory manner.

The Hays building, on 6th street, under the management of Contractor Danforth is making splendid progress.

The brick work is about completed now and the appearance is quite attractive. Mr. Danforth is going to have it ready for the Lee Smith Wholesale Grocery Company before many weeks.

Architect Price, who is in personal charge of the construction of the elegant new Methodist church, is forging ahead in great shape. He is laying his pressed brick now. They are white and are laid in snow white pointor, while the doors, windows and corners are finished with a darker shade of brick, and the combination makes an artistic effect that can't be beat.

Our Methodist friends are building with an eye to have a structure ample for years to come. Their building, together with the Baptist church and the Hospital are indeed creditable not only to Clanton, but to Central Alabama.

The fourth avenue railroad bridge is also beginning to take form. It will be a dandy when completed, and be wide enough to take care of all the traffic that may come along. They too see the possibilities that loom in the future of Clanton and are building accordingly.

The City authorities did a whole lot of filling in up there for abutments, but in looking over the situation yesterday it dawned on our mind that they have only cleverly begun their part of the work. The bridge is so much wider than the old one that the fill will have to be made as wide again as the old one was to meet the present condidious.

We hope they will not just "half do" their part, for we want to see a class "A" street connecting northwest Clanton with the business district without having to make the grade crossing on second avenue.

A GOOD BILL

A local bill for Shelby county passed by the legislature this week gives the sheriff an extra $10 for every still captured.

In view of the heavy expense an efficient sheriff has to incur out of his own pocket in seeking out and locating stills, it is nothing but right and just that he should have this extra fee.

Our Sheriff has done splendid service for us in this line and we wish to see a similar bill put through in his behalf. He certainly deserves it.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to thank the good people of Clanton for their uniform kindness to us during the sickness and death of our dear husband and father.

TO THE CITIZENS OF CHILTON COUNTY

One hundred and four years ago another star was placed in Old Glory and this fair state of Alabama became the 22d state in the greatest republic—yes the greatest nation —under God's heaven. From that day on with the citizenship bound together by a bond of common interests she has progressed until today she bids fair to be the greatest state in the union.

The stupendous growth of this section of the great South has indeed nullified all calculations of time and over turned all estimates of place and endeavor.

Where hamlets stood yesterday queenly cities today tower in opulence and industrial giants of the business world have replaced the commercial agencies to justify the pride of their founders. Natural resources unknown a few years ago now abound, bringing untold wealth and treasure. The then scattered farms, orchards, vineyards and "truck patches" have developed into marvelous estate and the world, so to speak, now feeds from the hands of this great empire of the Southland.

In the very heart of this wonderful transformation lies Chilton County.

So great and upon such a stupendous scale has been this development that some of the vital factors of human life— some of those essential agencies which are the foundation of genuine progress—have been overlooked and now struggle in the background unabled to keep step with the triumphal march of progress.

Outstanding among these backward elements of strength is civic, commercial, industrial and agricultrial, organization, shackled with the chains of incompetent leadership, equipment and management. The public mind once roused by this humiliating spectacle found its first expression in the reorganization of the Clanton Chamber of Commerce and the United Farmers of America in Chilton County. These organizations are the foundation upon which a greater and better community can be built.

The next imperative and logical step is the organization of a county wide Chamber of Commerce. The need of such an organization is very apparent to all of us. We need better roads, better farms, more modern school facilities, better churches, more industrial and manufacturing plants, better marketing facilities and last but not least better citizens. In fact our needs are legion. The experience of other communities situated similarly to ours has demonstrated that we can obtain these things by intelligent cooperation. For the purpose of discussing these matters and deciding upon the best means of attaining these much desired objects we must have a formal organization that will bring together every element of civic, commercial, industrial and agricultural strength in the county. This organization should stand preeminently for the improvement of the commercial, civic, industrial and agricultural conditions of the county. The upbuilding of the good will between men in business in the town and villages and the agricultural interest, and the creation of and understanding of the different methods employed in the successful pursuit of each endeavor.

In the past men have kept themselves in ignorance regarding business other than their own, so that all kinds of jealousies spring up and it is quite a common thing for merchants to condemn a farmer for highway robbery and profiteering when he is charged a $1.50 for a bushel of potatoes or corn, and a farmer to condemn a merchant for the same thing when he is asked to pay 35c a yeard for calico.

These differences of opinion are largely the result of ignorance that can readily be overcome by a closer association fostered by a county wide Chamber of Commerce. To help solve the community problems should be one of the aims of a county-wide Chamber of Commerce. For only when the community grows and prospers does the business of that community grow and prosper, be it merchandising, farming, poultry raising or boot blacking.

To accomplish the desired results set out in this article it would require concerted action by large numbers. Small and limited plans and activities should have no part in this program. The leadership under whose auspices the work should be done should measure up in every respect to the aims and ideals of such a movement. But Chilton county has this leadership and it is with this knowledge and with the hope that it may be enlisted with the support and influence of other leaders to the end that success may displace failure and happiness transplant sorrow, I submit this article for your consideration.

Respectfully yours,
CLAUD E. MARCUS

RATES BIG FACTOR IN GETTING MILLS

Effort Made to Get BetterAllowanco on Alabama Cotton

Location of textile mills in Alabama depends, among other things, on allowances of rates on concentration of cotton grown in Alabama and destined to Alabama mill centers, according to traffic experts. This matter will come before the Alabama Public Service commission for final adjudication on June 27.

At present, according to traffic officials, cotton grown in Alabama may be concentrated in Alabama cities like Birmingham and go thence to mills in Carolinas at a through rate which, they declare, is lower than the combination local rates to the Alabama mill center. The result, they say, is that the Alabama mill pays a higher freight on its cotton grown right here in Alabama than a Carolina mill does for the same cotton.

The traffic men say the rates allowed on concentrated cotton moving to the eastern mills will also often be lower than the combination of local rates to Alabama mills. New England thus getting Alabama cotton at lower total charges than Alabama mills.

It will be contended in argument for the right of concentrating Alabama cotton at Alabama points that the textile industry in Alabama is and has been hampered by the denial of these concentrating rates, while the textile industry of the Carolinas has been helped by concentration rates denied Alabama.

AN ENTERPRISE THAT MERITS YOUR SUPPORT

Notwithstanding the amount of shipping that is now lying idle in the harbors and at the docks of the United States, ocean travelers are still obliged to pay high rates for trans-Atlantic travel, and an unparalleled opportunity to build up the American Merchant Marine is being lost. Recognizing this fact, and realizing that the time was opportune for an undertaking of this nature, the organizers of the Great Northern S. S. Co. formed their Corporation, which received its charter from the State of Massachusetts, October 11, 1922.

They visualized a new ocean steamship line, plying between Boston and European ports, controlled by the people, which would offer to these same people a chance for ocean travel on comfortable commodious ships, at a price within the reach of all, but low enough to allow a profit for the investor and a sufficient margin to allow for the carrying on and enlarging of the enterprise.

This was their threefold purpose - to render a genuine service to the people,—to help build up American shipping,—and to bring business and trade to the port of Boston.

In spite of the failure of the Ship Subsidy Bill, in spite of the opposition which each new competitor in an established field encounters, this Company is bringing its plans to maturity and expects that very soon it will be able to offer definite sailing dates to the public.

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY TO BUILD $100,000,000 HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROJECT AT CHEROKEE BLUFFS

Birmingham, Ala., June 15—Special.—One of the largest, if not the largest, hydro power dams in the entire South will be constructed at once at Cherokee Bluffs, on the Tallapoosa River.

The development calls for the expenditure of $10,000,000, and the dam which will be 120 feet high and 800 feet long will have an ultimate capacity of 132,000 horsepower.

Authority for the construction of this dam and the power plant has been granted by the Federal Power Commission to the Alabama Power Company. President Thomas W. Martin announced Thursday afternoon that work would begin at once.

His announcement followed the issuance [illegible] by the Alabama Public Service Commission approving [illegible] on the Alabama Power [illegible] the Mount Vernon Woodberry Mills Company for the use of the surplus water at the site of the Mills Company plant at Tallassee Falls, the development to be made as a part of the Cherokee Bluffs development.

The building of the dam at Cherokee Bluffs will put the Alabama Power Company on the top of all [illegible] power projects.

In connection with the development it is understood in Alabama that arrangements will be worked in the regulation of water flow in the Alabama River by the navigation facilities as well as regulating overflow of water on lowlands about Montgomery.

T. G. Thurlow, Chief Engineer of the Alabama Power Company and its subsidiary, the Dixie Construction Company, estimates that it will require over two and one-half years to complete construction.

Approximately 200,000 cubic yards of concrete will be used in the dam and power house and the largest body of water in the state will be formed when a reservoir of 22,500 acres containing 25,000,000,000 cubic feet of water is back up by the dam.

Mr. Thurlow stated that the structure would be of a type popular in the Western States but little used in this section. The power house will be built below the dam instead of as an integral portion or on the up-stream side and the water will be conducted to the wheels through penstocks leading from the dam above. Three units, generating 44,000 horsepower each, the largest in the United States, are to be installed.

A thoroughly modern and sanitary camp will be built at the site to house employes and their families, and accommodations for a minimum of 3,000 will be provided. A water supply system with modern filtering plant and sewerage connections will be built, as well as a model hospital, recreation hall, motion picture show, commissary and the like, making up a modern village in every detail. The men will be fed by the company in large mess halls under the direction of competent ex-army stewards.

Mr. Martin stated that the Power company would employ the same practice as during the construction of Lock 12 and Mitchell Dam, purchasing all supplies, equipment and material in Alabama as far as possible. He regards the beginning of this work as a wise move since much of the equipment used in building Mitchell Dam can be transported to Cherokee Bluffs, saving it from deterioration through idleness. The nucleus of the executive force who built Mitchell Dam has been retained and will be used as a foundation upon which to build the new organization.

Cherokee Bluffs is in the center of a triangle formed by Montgomery, Alexander City and Dadeville. Since the average daily payroll during the period of actual construction will amount to over $4,000 the merchants of these places will felicitate themselves upon their geographical good fortune.

President Martin's statement follows:

"Under the terms of a license just granted by the Federal Power Commission, we will begin construction immediately of a hydro-electric development on the Tallapoosa river at the site known as Cherokee Bluffs, about twelve miles from Dadeville, in Tallapoosa and Elmore counties, the cost to be approximately ten million dollars. The plant will have an initial installation of about 88 thousand horsepower, and provision will be made for a total installation of one hundred and thirty-two thousand horsepower. The dam will be one hundred and twenty feet high, and will contain approximately two hundred thousand cubic yards of masonry and the work will require about thirty months to complete.

"The Tallapoosa river is a non-navigable stream, and with the Coosa forms the Alabama river near Montgomery. On account of its relation to navigation on the Alabama river, the Federal Government has, therefore, assumed jurisdiction of this power development. Provision will be made for storing flood waters and the plant will be operated in conjunction with other power developments of the company in the same region, so as to use the stored waters in times of drought and thus secure the largest possible benefit from the water storage. This plan of coordinating the several projects in different watersheds will develop, conserve and utilize the navigation and water power resources of the region to the greatest advantage; and as the stored water is released in times of drought, it will thus have the effect of increasing the minimum flow of water in the Alabama river for navigation purposes. When the project is completed it will be possible to have four and one-half foot navigation on the Alabama river up to Montgomery throughout the year.

"Another important benefit from the development will be that the storage reservoirs included in this development will also have an important effect in minimizing the flood damage to the bottom lands along the Tallapoosa and Alabama rivers.

"This development will not only improve the service throughout the power system of the company, but will make available a large additional volume of power. This will enable the company to further meet the industrial needs of the state as well as supplying lighting and power service in many comunities which have requested service from the company.

"We are pleased to make this announcement just at this time when other power companies in some sections of the South are suspending development.

"The power requirements upon our system before the Cherokee Bluffs development when completed will be larger than can be supplied from our present hydro and steam plants and we hope, therefore, to go forward with other developments which can be completed in much shorter time, and the construction of these several developments will, we believe, attract many industries to the state which under different circumstances would locate elsewhere.

"In accordance with the company's policy, all materials and supplies will be purchased with the state so far as available."

HOME CAPITAL

Large cotton mills at Montgomery and Mobile have changed hands recently, the two deals involving more than a million dollars. In each instance the sales were made by Sothern captialists which is the more significant than had they been taken over by Northern interests. Alabama wants outside money and welcomes investment by the outsider, but the greatest of achievements industrially and commercially is when her own people are able to swing these big deals with their own brains and their own money. Investment of home money in established home institutions and industries is the acid test. It shows that the industry is a successful one and shows also that Alabamians have so well conducted their affairs that there is a surplus money in this state for taking over, improving and enlarging established and successful industries, and founding and building new ones.

Numbers of cotton mills deals have every field of effort. In the matter of the cotton mills it is encouraging to realize that Alabamians have seen their opportunity and have been taking over a good thing before outsiders grabbed it. There is plenty of room left for the outsider and he will come the sooner because he senses our appreciation of our own opportunities. Capital likes to enter such atmosphere. —Age-Herald—Editorial.

BRANDON ON EDUCATION

Governor Brandon told the people during his campaign that there would be no backward step in education during his term. He repeated the declaration before the state democratic convention. The state endorsed it by making it a part of the platform on which the party went before the voters in the general election.

It is pleasing now to know that the governor has sought to prevent a backward step. He has returned the bill providing for the election of the superintendent of education of Coffee county to the House of Representatives with the suggestion that the qualifications of the superintendents so elected be the same as the qualifications of the superintendents elected by boards of education. The House has concurred in the amendment.

Many believe the passage of the bill was a backward step and that it will make the superintendency of Coffee county a political football, which may be captured by the best "handshaker" and the one whose "whooping up" in political contests is most effective. But under the unvarying rule of Legislatures whereby local bills are passed when the delegations representing the people affected are in agreement the Legislature saw fit to pass the bill.

Governor Brandon did not feel that he could veto a bill which affected only one county when the representative and senator desired it, but he did feel that Coffee county school children should not be forced to accept less in the way of competency than was accorded other counties. Therefore, he proposed the amendment. It was the next best thing and the governor is entitled to the thanks of those who have a real interest in education and who desire that all counties may progress in an educational way.

It's a pity, however, that Coffee and a few other counties of Alabama desire to abandon a system which has been found efficient and which has been approved by leaders in educational work throughout the nation. Perhaps, the day will come soon when they will return to a system in which politics is made subordinate to education.—Montgomery Journal.

HAD THE WRONG MAN

Some little time ago the house of Prof. Martin was entered by a negro and considerable excitement followed.

A negro named Peterson, who lived near by, was suspected and footprints leading toward his house resulted in his arrest.

Mr. J. W. Franklin, who knows this negro, hearing that a convict had escaped from Spiegner the day before the crime, and looking at the shoes that the party who broke into the house had left, decided that the shoes looked like convict shoes, so he went to Speigner, carrying the shoes with him, and the following correspondence from the Warden explains what followed.

Speigner Prison, July 24,1923.

To whom it may concern:

Mr. J. W. Franklin of Clanton, brought to this prison a pair of shoes to see if they could be identified as shoes that were worn by Will Coleman, an escaped convict at the time of his escape.

I would not say that these were the shoes but will say the State issues this exact pattern and a good many of the inmates and several of the Guards claim they resemble very much the ones worn by Will Coleman. At the time of his escape he was the coal roller for the Alabama Cotton Mills. Mr. Russel, the man on the gate where Will Coleman passed several times a day, says that Will wore his shoes untied and in a slouchy condition.

The prisoners cut their shoes very bad on account of the weight, and they are very bad about trading shoes to one another, therefore, we could not say positive these were the shoes issued to Will Coleman.

This negro was serving four sentences for Burglary and Grand Larceny.

Very truly yours,
GEO. P. WALLS
Warden.

Mr. J. W. Franklin,
Clanton, Ala.
Dear Sir:

Your letter of August 4th received. The shoes that were found, did belong to Will Coleman, and your negro should be turned loose.

I would appreciate it if the first one you are passing that you would bring us the shoes or send them as we need them in this case.

I hope this information will clear your negro. Will Coleman says he was without food, and went in this house for that purpose. He went in the house alone. Anything else I can help you in this case, I will be glad to do so.

Very truly yours,
GEO. P. WALLS
Warden.

GREAT MEETING AT COOPER.

We have heard a great deal of favorable comment in regard to the revival at the Baptist church in Cooper that closed alst Saturday night.

From what we can learn a great work was done there for the Lord. Rev. Hughes is pastor and he was ably assisted by Rev. Nickols, of Birmingham. Report agrees that Rev. Nickols did some wonderfully effective preaching during the meeting and that he is a very able and consecrated minister of the gospel.

About 20 members were added to the church 16 by baptism.

On the last night a small contingent of the K. K. Ks. in regalia passed silently through the house and left with the pastor, a splendid contribution in cash.

We are authorized to say that the people of that congregation thank them for the donation most heartily.

WORK STARTED

Contractor Jas. Dupree has begun work this week on the construction of a large and expensive bungalow home for Mr. Dewey Rocket on the Chestnut lot on east second avenue.

New homes are going up in every section of town but the demand for house room does not seem to decrease to any appreciable extent.

HUMAN DERELICT

As the shadows of evening were closing in last Thursday a truck drew up at the depot and unloaded a negro who gave his name as Henry Myers.

He came from a lumber camp across the river and was trying to make his way to a charity hospital in Mobile.

The hand of death was already upon him and his aimless and sinful career on earth was drawing to a close in payment for the misspent and profligate days he had spent

He was just a tattered piece of flotsam cast adrift here by the stream of life. Without home, without friends, with no fixed destination, the dire disease that travels hand in hand with the licentious life of the profligate claimed him at last as he lay on the floor of the depot waiting room.

The manner of his passing is just another horrible example to the young men of both races. His fate can over take any wanderer who throws the best of his life away in a lustful and licentious living.

Young men, this is not idle talk but is true now and has always been true from the first. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." You can not beat Nature out of one second. You may postpone payment for awhile but the principle and interest is certain to be paid in the end. Any of you can die an outcast and sleep your last sleep in an unknown grave.

MR. J. H. PRINCE IS NO MORE

Last Wednesday, August 1st, at 11 a. m. the spirit of Mr. J. H. Prince, a highly esteemed and christain gentleman, of our town, was called over to the land beyond the grave.

Mr. Prince was born in Talladega county January 12, 1860 and died at his home here on August 1st. 1923, having lived to the ripe age of 63 years and seven months.

He moved to Clanton from Gadsden about three years ago and during his residence here although being in poor health from a severe stroke of paralysis, his uniform good humor and agreeable manners won for him the universal respect and esteem of every one, and when he died the sorrow at his passing away was sincere and wide spread.

He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his loss, three sons and two daughters. The sons are A. S. Prince of Clanton, J. F. Prince, of Memphis and W. D. Prince, of Michigan. The girls are Mrs. Anna Gardner and Miss Ruth Prince, of Clanton.

The remains were buried the following day, August 2, at the City Cemetery and were followed to the grave by many friends. Dr. C. C. Wilkerson, pastor of the Methodist church here officiated

Personally we had known Mr. Prince almost ever since he came to Clanton and had learned to appreciate and esteem him very highly as a friend and we shall miss his visits to our office and the cheering influence of his example. To the family we would extend our most sincere sympathy and point them to the blessed truth that he is at rest in a home where suffering is no more, and where he can await in pleased anticipation of the happy meeting to come when, one by one, they cross over the divide and join him in that "home not made with hands eternal in the skies."

THE WADESONIAN BURNS

Last Sunday morning at about 2 o'clock the fire alarm sounded out in the down town district, and soon the deserted streets were thronged with an anxious crowd, each one fearing a spread of the consuming flames and a disastrous conflagration in our city.

Soon it became apparent that the fire was located in the Wadesonian theatre ,which had its home in the remodeled old Baptist church building, and was a massive wooden structure and made a tremendous blaze.

Fortunately there was scarcely a breeze stirring and by faithful and consistent efforts, the fire department contrived to confine the blaze to the one building. The entire outfit, fixtures and all were a total loss.

The Saturday night show broke up about 11 o'clock and lights were turned off and the house closed up immediately afterwards. No one seems to have any idea as to how the fire got started. Some suggest a cigarette left smouldering on the inside, while others say that a crossed electric wire may have been responsible for the blaze.

Officer Hawk says when it showed up on the outside the entire roof burst into flames almost at once.

We learn that $1,500 insurance was carried on the building but failed to get any definate estimate as to how much, if any, was carried on the fixtures.

It is reported that Mr. C. W. Wade the proprietor will go about installing another show right away, even if he has to build a home for it.

Last Friday afternoon a goodly [illegible] Park to witness a game of ball between the [illegible] teams. The [illegible] more swatter.

By the aid of some very wonderful rulings by one of the Umpires the game was real close but, like we boys used to say "cheating never thrives." so the Clanton team nosed out in the last half of the ninth a winner by a score of 3 to 4

Some real ball playing was pulled off by both teams and had it not been for the raw umpiring that marred the pleasure of the game at intervals all the way through.

No one enjoys a game of ball more than the writer, but the sporting element of a game is destroyed when palpable unfairness crops up.

SOME NEWSPAPER FACTS

There are some people in the world who have peculiar ideas about honesty and bad debts.

For instance. If you place an advertisement in a newspaper or other periodical without giving an order for how many times you wish it to appear the law says you owe for the space your ad occupies until you order it discontinued. If you fail or refuse to pay for it you have "bought that paper's goods and refused to pay for it."

Merchants are great hands to howl about things of that kind, but some of them fail to see the other side of the question after they have bought the goods of some paper.

The same thing is true in regard to your subscription to a paper. The law says if you accept a paper from the mail week after week, you owe for it the same as for any other article you buy and, if the paper man was to go in to court with his little bill, with proof that you had been taking it from the mail, you would have to pay for it and whatever cost might accrue.

These are plain facts that you might consider when your bill is presented.

A newspaper does its best to help every man, woman and child under its zone of influence. It tries to keep its readers posted on all vital questions. It follows its readers even to the grave and pays the last tribute or respect to the memory of the dead. It removes with them in their joys and success and sorrows with them in their grief. It does this gladly without hope of reward. It boosts their town and county, magnifying the good points and discreetly keeping silent on the bad, and so on.

But, it costs money to keep a paper going. The people who get it out have to eat occassionally and wear enough clothes to keep the officers from arresting them for public indency and, you bet, they have to pay for what they get.

Now and then measure up your own honesty by the bills rendered by your neswspaper.

ALABAMA ENDORSES UNDERWOOD

By a unanimous vote of the Alabama Legislature in joint session, Hon. Oscar W. Underwood was requested to throw his hat in the ring and make the race for the Democratic nomination for president next year.

This, together with thousands of other requests from all over the country, has decided him to make the race, so we will see whether or not a man from the South can be nominated and elected to this high office.

The South has been the rallying ground now for the Democratic party for lo, these many years, and during that time we have been content to "tote the skillet" for the other fellow whether he exactly suited us or not.

Now the time has arrived for us to see whether or not our service has been appreciated. The South is offering a statesman second to none in whole country. A man who has been tried out and found capable of rising to every emergency and big enough and broad enough to cope with any situation, whether at home or accross the seas. He is given up to be past master of tariff legislation in all its phases and is perhaps, the best posted man in the United States today with regard to the needs and the dangers of a foreign policy.

In other words, Oscar Underwood is one of the most competent, if not the premier, of all the real Statesmen in the United States today. He is not in any sense a politician but he is essentially a big, broad brainy 100 per cent American citizen in whose hands the destinies of this whole country, east, west, north, and south would be safe and secure.

From these letters it looks like the Peterson negro owes a debt of gratitude to Mr. Franklin for taking the interest he did in the case. Everyone will be glad to know that the innocent man was saved and the guilty party located.

GOOD NAME ABROAD

The congregation of the Presbyterian Church was given a most pleasant treat on Sunday morning, when a delegation of ladies who are stopping at Gary Springs filled the choir and rendered a most pleasing program. Mrs. Wailes Wallace of Columbiana, presided at the organ, while Mrs. Middleton of Montevallo and Miss Curry of Clanton, sang. Miss Curry's case and sweetness of voice, with the strains of sweet music, made the service a most pleasing and impressive one. Centerville Press.

It is of more than passing interest to our home folks to note the many complimentary expressions made by The Centerville Press of Gary Springs.

Miss Curry has just closed her second successful session as instructor of music in our county High School and will enter upon a course of study in voice under the guidance of one of New York City's celebrated instructors.

Mrs. Middleton has spent a number of years as teacher of piano and violin in Clanton, Montevallo and Columbiana. She has been prevailed upon by a number of friends to open a musical studio in Clanton for the forthcoming year. Her leavening influence will be felt by many. For Clanton and Chilton are appreciative and usually accord honor where honor is due.

W. T. White of Benson, was in town on business Monday. Reported the boll weevil flourishing.

Your Insurance Is Backed By Railroad Securities ~

Fact No. 5

Almost everyone owns an insurance policy, but few people know or realize that almost every insurance policy is backed to some degree by the underwriting company's ownership of railroad securities.

Take the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, as an example. Their President states that they have two hundred and sixty six million dollars invested in railroad securities. These securities are owned by the many thousands of people who have policies in the "Metropolitan."

The people who own the railroads are the people of this country—largely the small investors; the owners of life insurance policies---not a few extremely wealthy people, as agitators would have you believe.

When hampering regulations and unjust legislation diminish the value of railroad bonds and scare people from investments for the promotion of railroads---for their extension and their proper equipment---the masses of the common people are the real sufferers.

HIGH SCHOOL COLUMN

This article is written primarily to give the parents my ideas along the lines discussed herein. I do not ask you to accept my ideas, I merely ask you to cerefully consider them and then accept whatever good you may find.

One of the most striking developments in recent educational history is the rapid change that has taken place in the prevailing conceptions of the purposes of the high school. The importance of this fact is not always realized by the teacher or the patrons One of the principal differences which arise is the antithesis between the cultural and the vocational aspect of the school. From 1500 to1750 the high school was composed of a selective group and generally aristocratic in its tendencies. Down to the time of Queen Elizabeth, who died in 1603, Latin occupied the principal place in the curriculum. Soon after her death the modern languages replaced Latin in the commercial world and Latin declined in the schools. In Boston, the first English High School was opened in 1821. The public high schools have been very slow to adopt vocational courses. This is shown by the large number of private schools which were founded in the East to teach the usable subjects such as Composition, Rhetoric, Arithemetic, Trigonometry and Surveying. As the public high schools began to to take over the vocational or usable subjects, the private Academies were forced to drop back to the purely so-called cultural subjects. It is not surprising, therefore, that Latin has been practically abolished from the course of study in the public high schools over the country. The majority of those which do teach Latin do not require Latin but allow the pupil to choose it.

To my way of thinking there seems to be a misconception of what are cultural and what are vocational subjects. The wrong basis seems to have been taken for a determination of what are cultural subjects. People have been taught to think in terms of the subjects themselves rather than in terms of the vocation or occupation of the learner. What is vocational for one may be cultural for another. Take the study of Chemistry, for example, which is purely vocational for the future Chemist, yet for the Classical student Chemistry is strictly a cultural subject. There are some who think that Latin, Greek, French, and Grammar are the only cultural subjects in the curriculum. I studied all of them, and I do not believe either one of them is near as cultural as the study of Plane and Solid Geometry, judging from the subject itself. Judging from the new point of view which is fast becoming commonly accepted, Latin is vocational to a very few professions. It is fast dying in the high schools. I rejoice to see the day which not more than two years will be permitted in the high school. (I can see some of you throw up your hands in horror) Economics is vocational to the man who expects to enter business, but it is cultural to the Language scholar. Language studied for the commercial purpose becomes vocational and loses its cultural aspect. Any subject not in line with the field in which a pupil is doing his work to prepare for a vocation is strictly cultural, while any which is in line with his vocation becomes purely vocational.

Turning now to concrete things I call to your attention a few which you already know. The home must take back some of the responsibility which has been shunted to the school in the training of the child. Some people send their children to school and expect the teacher to turn them out polished young men and young ladies, yet the same people are not willing to do their part to give the expected polish. If the parents allow their children to interrupt the conversation of the people much their elder, how can they blame the school for letting a few things go by. Some argue that the teacher is hired to do those things. My goodness, ought not the parents to have a thousand times more interest in the welfare of their children than the teacher who is merely "an hired servant"? I have heard parents say that they sent their children to school to keep from being bothered with them. Some in Clanton have gone almost that far in their statements. If you do not want to be bothered with them why pick on the school by sending them there to be a source of trouble and worry to the teachers?

All human beings make mistakes. However much some of you may doubt it, all teachers are human beings. Therefore, all teachers make mistakes. When a teacher makes a mistake, how many of you go to that teachr and tell him in a nice way of his error? Do you not rather prefer to get off somewhere and "preach his funeral" to somebody and begin to lay plans to get rid of him? Last spring I heard the air filled with such a voluminous stream of obnoxious words of condemnation that only the goodness of the Divinity in sending a wind could purify. Goodness gracious, if you will pardon a colloquialism, why not help the teacher instead of making his course as hard as you can possibly make it? Many times a good teacher has to leave a community just because of the little things which someone or ones hold against him. Oftentimes the trouble could have been remedied and the teacher have remained on the job for years if the ones who hold the grudges had been broad-minded enough to have gone to the teacher and got an understanding.

There are some people who rather than go to the teacher and try to get an understanding would rather see him or her make a complete failure so that they, the patrons, might get rid of him or her at the end of the year and thus satisfy a personal grudge. Have you ever seen such people? I have. I grant to ever man the inalienable right to his or her opinion but I demand the right to have mine.

I want your co-operation. I need your co-operation. I must have your co-operation to give you the best of service. If every person will back up the Faculty for the entire year and will not let little things get into the way, I believe we can do some effective work this year. I am not promising to please you even then, but we are going to do our best. If that does not suit you, then kick us out and get a new crowd. I do bid for your support for the full year, however, so as to give us a fair chance. You must realize that we have a big task before us, made greater by the fact that we are all new on the job at the high school. If you see us get off the track, come tell us about it instead of getting out on the street and knocking us. A school man never knows whether he is satisfying unless someone tells him so, or more often begins to "knock" him.

My subject next week will be "The Submarine Attack."

Respectfully,
IRA PEGUES,
Prin. Chilton Co., Hight School

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY AND THE PUBLIC

Power Development and the Farmer

"The great power development will mark sites of industrial centers, adjacent to which will grow up rich areas of intensive agricultural production. The industrial populations will provide markets, without impossible transportation expenditure for the products of the soil; and in turn the people on the soil will afford markets for the products of industry."

No other natural resource nets a greater return to the farmer than water that turns the huge generators of the Alabama Power Company.

No other natural resource spreads its benefits over a greater area.

Covering a territory of more than 25,000 square miles, a great network of high-powered transmission lines silently convey their indescribable force to more than 750,000 Alabamians and more than one hundred and seventy major industries. In these industries approximately 150,000 industrial workers look to a continuous flow of current to keep their jobs intact and to feed and clothe 500,000 or more dependents.

Each of these 150,000 workers, while a producer of raw materials and manufactured products, is a consumer of agricultural products.

Cognizant of the fact that these consumers could only be procured by the creation of new industries or the enlargement of existing ones, Alabama Power Company has ever assisted in the development of Alabama's manufactories, and is now engaged in a nation-wide campaign to attract new capital to Alabama for the development of her resources.

It is the Power Company's task to keep the wheels of these industries turning—to keep these workers employed—to keep wages in their pockets to buy things which they do not produce.

It is the farmers' job to feed and clothe them.

So, there is an appreciable common interest between the Power Company and the farmer in the great work of building Alabama industrially and agriculturally. This great network of transmission lines is constantly growing, each extension creating new markets for our farm products and inviting new industries to come in.

That these two great forces—industry and agriculture—are going hand-in-hand is shown conclusively in the following figures reproduced from the Blue Book of Southern Progress:

	1900	1910	1920
Capital Invested in Manufactories	$60,165,904	$173,180,038	$455,593,000

Co-ordinated effort between Alabama Power Company and the other agencies which are endeavoring to build up our State, and the farmer, will rapidly bring Alabama to the forefront as the matchless industrial and agricultural area of the country.

A recent survey of conditions in Illinois disclosed the fact that manufacturing is leaving the large, congested and expensive districts and going to the open areas. This is carrying industrial progress to the rural communities, thereby establishing new markets right at the door of the farmer. In its efforts to attract new manufactories to the State, and in extending its lines into the small communities, the Alabama Power Company believes ultimately the manufacturing and industrial activities of Alabama will not be confined to certain restricted centers but to every section of the State, thereby increasing land values and removing the distance between the farm and its market.

TO RETIRE ON THEIR LAURELS

Messers, Mallie White and Dunward Broadhead, who have spent a good part of their summer vacation on getting acquainted" with the habits and appetites of the cat fish below Lock 12, have about completed their course now and, as they are preparing to retire from the game, they decided to establish a record for all other fishermen to try for.

They went out and [illegible] arrangements with due [illegible] and diligence and the results were all they could have desired.

After landing nearly [illegible] pounds of the 10 and 15 pound variety they proceeded to perfect the grand coupe. They captured one cat that weighed 77 pounds, but not fancying odd numbers if pound they went back and took the [illegible] for the whole season, an old grandfather cat with gray whiskers, broke even on the 80 pound mark.

Go to it, boys, you have your task laid off.

A SAD HOME COMING

Something like two months ago Mr. W. W. Fox and his wife left Clanton for an extended and leisurely auto trip. This was the fulfillment of a dream they had cherished for years.

Several times in the past they had made their plans for a long vacation trip, but something would intervene, some matter of business, in the busy life of Mr. Fox, would get in the way and they would postpone that happy vacation dream for a future date.

Finally everything was propitious and they embarked, with fond anticipation of regaining lost health and enjoying together, a real honeymoon in their declining years.

Week after week rolled away and the freshes of this cherished dream were [illegible] into blissful realities as they journeyed together, from place to place, inhaling new health and happiness from the breezes and living over again in memory, the days of their early love and the years of their happy life voyage hand in hand.

Finally they turned their footsteps homeward and, as the evening shadows gathered over the hill tops in North Alabama, on August the 6 their car was sliding along with them across the state line of Tennessee and toward the city of Huntsville, where they formerly lived and made many friends, when suddenly disaster and sorrow entered into the picture of contentment and the most priceless treasure that earth had ever bestowed upon Mr. Fox was cruelly snatched from his hand and he passed under a sombre pall of sorrow, that is destined to brood over his pathway continually now until the glorious lights from the mystic shore beyond break upon his vision and he is enabled to begin an eternal honeymoon with the cherished wife who has gone on before.

In making an abrupt curve in the road the rear wheels of their car skidded and in a moment they were pinned under the machine which burst into flames. Both were helplessly caught in the wreck and neither could do aught to aid the other.

Their cries for help finally brought to their assistance some men of the neighborhood who succeeded in extricating them from their perilous proximity to a fiery death, but not until Mrs. Fox had received such fearful burns that death came to her relief at 6 o'clock Saturday morning at the hospital in Huntsville.

They were about 30 miles north of Huntsville when the accident took place and it was almost dawn of the following day before the ambulance [illegible] from Huntsville for them could complete the round trip and get them to a place where their wounds and burns could be given attention. During this time both of them lived in agony.

The remains of Mrs. Fox were brought down on No. 9 Sunday morning and carried to the elegant home on 2nd avenue, South where the and Mr. Fox have resided a number of years, where they remained until 3 o'clock in the afternoon when they were carried to the Baptist church and the final funeral services rendered there.

Dr. C. C. Wilkerson, pastor of the Methodist Church, assisted by Dr. S. J. Ezell, the Baptist pastor, were in charge of these sad rites. A special Choir was selected for the occassion and furnished some most excellent and appropriate music.

The large auditorium, together with the spacious gallery, was packed with a throng of sorrowing friends. The audience in the church was conservatively estimated at 700. The banks of floral offerings were beautiful beyond compare. The funeral cortage was so great that a continuous line of automobiles extended entirely from the city cemetery, where interment was made, back to the church.

Mrs. Fox, before her marriage, was Miss Willie E. Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Stewart, of Athens, Ala. She was born in 1875 and married to W. W. Fox in 1897.

So ends the happy journey they have made together on the shores of time, but in future, when the clouds have rolled away and there comes the dawn of that eternal day she will be waiting for her loved one, at the beautiful gate, and as the aeons of eternity roll, they will go on another vacation that will have no end.

We extend to our valued friend all the sympathy that it is possible for one true friend to feel for another. May the merciful fingers of time soothe the lacerated heart that will know no healing until that happy meeting in the sweet by and by.

The following relatives from a distance of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Fox attended the funeral of the latter here last Sunday.

Mrs. Ellen Cathlett and Mr. Arther Dixon, of Savier county, Tenn.
Mrs. J. B. Reed and Mr. P. C. Dixon, of Knoxville, Tenn.
Mr. L. M. Dixon, of Cleburn, Tenn.
Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Stewart, parents of Mrs. Fox, of Athens Ala.
Mr. Chas Stewart, of Athens, Ala.
Mrs. Wilton Mayers of Tarnes, Ala.
Mr. Broadus Connaiser, of Huntsville.

Besides these a large number of relatives were present from the western part of our county.

PASSING STRANGE

After the extensive campaign that the National Government has just completed in Chilton county, demonstrating to the people the absolute futility of fighting against the great government of the United States, it is passing strange—it is perfectly inconceivable to blow up vats or in any other manner obstruct the program for tick eradication.

It does look like that every sane person would heed the warning and cease to impede, or try to impede, the cleaning up of the cattle tick in Chilton county, especially so, when sooner or later, some body is going to wake up and find themselves in serious trouble with the government.

As we have said before, we are not attempting to discuss the merits of cattle dipping—that matter has been settled for us—but we would like to impress upon every citizen of the county the fact, that to molest a vat, or in any other way, to interfefe with the execution of the law, is going to put somebody in bad trouble before they know it, and you can bet your bottom dollar that your Uncle Sam does not play any favorites. "Them days are gone forever," and neither your money nor your political pull will be worth a cent when Uncle Sam calls your hand. Let us urge you, for your own sake, to fall in line and aid, instead of impede, in the drive that will never let up until the county is made tick free. It will be too late to howl after the Deputy get you dead to rights. The federal [illegible] is cavorting for you now.

WHO DO THEY SERVE

Last Friday the House of Representation of Alabama went on record as refusing to offer any aid or comfort to Alabama convicts, even to the extent of refusing to them the mercy of State supervision when leased out, or sold into slavery.

The members of that body have voluntarily chosen whom they will serve. They all know, good and well that a vast majority of the citizens who elected them are in favor, and have demanded, the immediate abolishment of the convict leasing system. Only those who profit, in dollars and cents out on the sweat and blood of the unfortunate victims of greed, are in favor of the perpetuation of this legalized system of slavery. The solon have chosen openly whom they will serve.

It is not pitiful that the enlightened and civilized citizenship of the great state of Alabama shall thus be shackled in shame before all the world that a few coal operators may be allowed to heap up their wealth at the expense of the good name and human reputation of our great state?

Has our form of representative government fallen down? Are the masses of the people—the real supporters of a free government to be used only to cast ballots on election day?

This is the most flagrant case that we can remember of where the voice of the people was openly flouted and that, too, without even an excuse or apology. The representatives can not go back [illegible] did not know what their constituents wanted. They do know and know beyond the shadow of a doubt, what the almost unanimous sentiment in Alabama is.

The people of Alabama are as humane and progressive as any people in the United States and it is a sorrowful condition when they can not get their wishes carried out by their public servants.

W. S. PRICE HURT

Mr. W. S. Price, who lives in Ozark, but who is located here at present superintending the construction of the Methodist church, was on his way home last Saturday evening about 8 o'clock, and was in about 3 miles of Brundidge when he met a Ford car, belonging to the Wilcox Produce Co of Montgomery, which was traveling at a high rate of speed, with lights on so bright that it blinded everyone in front.

Mr. Randolph Carver, who was driving Mr. Price's Durant, dimmed his lights, reduced his speed and pulled out to the right. The other car came on at full speed and crashed into the Durant with such force that it was turned across the road from the impact.

Both cars were put out of commission and the car of Mr. Price was terribly torn to pieces.

No one was seriously hurt except Mr. Price, who is suffering from a broken collar bone as the result of his experience.

Another result of allowing irresponsible drivers to handle cars on the public roads.

A TRIP OUT WEST

Mr. Bud Jones quitely departed a week or so ago and before any body knew it he had made an extensive western trip.

He is home again now and is full of news. He is a close and competent judge on all matters affecting the farm and his report on general crop conditions in Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi is far from encouraging.

He says out in the main rich cotton delta in Texas the crop is almost a complete failure for the lack of rain. Everything is parched up and he saw large fields of growing corn that he believes would have burned over if set on fire.

The cane crop of Southern Louisana is also very poor. He saw some rice that looked fairly good but all other crops on his entire round trip are exceedingly poor.

KILLED IN THE MINES

Sunday afternoon Undertaker Martin was called upon to bury all that remained of Aubrey Findley, a boy 16 years of age and who met his death in a fall of rock in Boothton Mines a few days before.

The father of this boy Mr. George Findley, who for a number of years resided in Clanton, was brought back here and buried last fall.

AN EXCITING RACE WE GUESS

Last Tuesday night at exactly 9:30 o'clock, one of the most closely contested races we have seen was pulled off on 2nd avenue, through the business district and out towards West End.

We failed to learn who the contestants were, but as the racing vehicles passed in front of the Wilson Hotel, the race was neck and neck and "90 to nothing was put in the shade."

The public should be notified of these events in advance, so they could crawl in a hole or climb a pole.

A REAL FREAK

Saturday Messers I. L. Bice and J. N. Courtney were exhibiting in Clanton what was a real freak of nature. It was a pair of Siamese snake twins. Two perfect heads and considerable section of bodies were grown together, into one body for a distance, and then two perfect separate tails adorned the other end of the united body.

The entire combination seemed to be in good health and condition, and attracted a good deal of curious attention.

REALIZING THE POSSIBILITIES OF CLANTON

One Enterprising Citizen Has Caught the Vision of Clanton's Progress

Realizing as I do that Clanton has put aside it's swaddling clothes and has entered upon an era of prosperity and progress that is destined to make it the metropolis of Central Alabama I have determined to meet that point more than half way, in my business so I have put into my market a refrigerating plant that is in the very front rank as a modern and sanitary method of caring for all perishable stuff and is equal to and in a class with anything used in the largest cities of the entire country.

I have moved into new quarters just completed and arranged for my special convenience and comfort. I am now in the [illegible] building on North 7th street, three doors from second avenue.

I want to invite all of the people of Clanton to come in and give me a call. I keep all of my meats and other perishable goods at a standing temperature of 36 degrees and absolutely free from moisture.

My place is up to the very latest city plans in the handling of meats and, believing as I do, that nothing is too good for Clanton people I take pride in setting this pace in the march of progress.

I invite your closest inspection and request an interest in your trade.

If a perfect modern service is what you want I know you will be more than satisfied with my place.

Yours Truly,
GEO MARCUS

SOME SNAKE

A most wonderful dispersation of Providence was made manifest Sunday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Emma Foshee.

Mrs. Foshee is the mother of Prof. H. L. Foshee, Chilton county School Superintendent, and he and his wife and two little children had come out to spend the day. Mr. Ali Vines and family were also there.

After dinner the little two year old girl and four year old boy of Prof. Foshee were out in the grass playing among the flowers. Suddenly the little boy screamed in fright and the older ones ran to his rescue.

Imagine their horror and surprise when they discovered a monster rattle snake, 44 inches long and having 11 rattles and a button, coiled ready for battle under a flower bush.

Investigation was made at once and everybody was delighted to find that a kind Providence had taken care of the children and neither of them had been bitten.

Mrs. Foshee lives out four miles west of Clanton, in a very open section of country thickly settled and snakes are a decided rarity out there. Whence this rattler came and why he had decided to stop in the flower yard is a mystery. The escape of the little boy and girl is wonderful.

Up Hill---Or Down?

Some of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

Reconstruction days must be coming back. The [illegible] worm has arrived.

The idiot is the person who opposes Sunday legislation on the gorund that it is mixing up church and state.

The law against the public masquerading of men and women by swapping garments seems to have been suspended.

An optomist is the farmer who sees the forms all falling off of his cotton and then agrees that he has no boll weevil.

Last Monday morning Mr. R. M. Powell made the ballets of the editors family glad by presenting us with a [illegible]. We thank you.

You can make your arrangements now to pay $2 per bushel for seed corn if you have to buy it next year.

The next cotton statement put out by the government, to be accurate had better cut their estimate down to at least 8,000,000 bales.

Who will be the first editor in Alabama to sport a "free" railroad pass paid for in advertising. A fair exchange is the life of business.

[illegible] divide the profit on one acre corn ground out of $1.00 wheat, the wheat farmer should have his [illegible].

The rain weather last Friday and Saturday made the streets so slick that the speeder and stunt auto driver were considerably interfered with.

Almost any half baked loafer can [illegible] a critic. But a critic who has accomplished something constructive is as scarce as hen teeth.

The game of politics has been reduced to such a fine art by the average "public servant" that it is almost impossible to get any real constructive [illegible].

The two "Turn to the right" signals in operation seem to be having a [illegible] effect on motor autoists. We don't know what part of the game that [illegible] signals setting out in a back lot are expected to play.

A law that does not bear down on the rich and well to do in the very same degree that it does on the less prosperous is decidedly revolutionary. We are not supposed to have a privileged class in this free country.

The first bale of 1923 Alabama cotton was [illegible] in Greene county, [illegible] 304 pounds, was [illegible] in Montgomery and sold at auction and brought 34 cents last Friday.

Why have school [illegible] 20 [illegible] this year? Did you know that one system of "free" education in Alabama has already become so individually expensive that it is prohibitive to a large number of poor people?

It is [illegible] by observing farmers that the quail does not feed on boll weevils. And [illegible] of the game warden gone to the dogs.

Why is it that the legislative bodies fight so shy of enacting a law requiring a drivers license for operating motor cars? Looks like such a law if enforced, would eliminate a great many accidents.

The people of the South have lived through two assaults of the locust, they also weathered a visitation of army worms back in the 70's that even to remember now is perfectly unreasonable. They have had dry years and wet years, cold years and hot years, good years, and bad years, still they have clung to king cotton through it all. Now the boll weevil is giving them a run for their money, but afterawhile, the farmers will emerge from the conflict and the banner of King Cotton will still be waving on high.

QUALIFY AS A VOTER

To be a qualified voter you must pay your poll and be properly registered. Without these two things you can not vote.

As the law stands you can not put off these requisite qualifications until election day and then get in. You must pay your tax and register at the proper time and in the proper way if you expect to vote.

We are told that there are more democratic voters in Chilton county than republican, if they would only qualify.

Now, the question is just this. Is you enough of a democrat that you are willing to go to this trifling expense and trouble to make your party a certain winner?

You can do it if you want to and if you fail it will be your own fault.

The failure to keep up a party organization and see to it that poll taxes were paid and voters registered is responsible for the political conditions existing here today.

As a normal southern community Chilton county would be democratic. The entire South is democratic and we are living utterly out of touch and sympathy of our country and trusting to our neighbors for protection, instead of falling in line with the overwhelming sentiment that dominates all of the only section of the country that we [illegible] affiliated with.

This is an abnormal and very injurious condition and the democratic voters, by their apathy and indifference have contributed to the existence of this very condition.

Are you going to keep it up?

If every loyal democratic in the county will take this matter to heart, and make of himself a committee of one to work for registration and tax paying, victory at the polls will be the inevitable result.

If you [illegible] don't put it off but go to work right now and never let up.

We may expect to do that or we may expect defeat at the polls until we do.

The Executive Committee should meet and take this matter up at once.

ISABELLA AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL

Last Saturday was a great day in this splendid new educational enterprise established by those progressive citizens out there this summer. Their buildings are ready for the fall term and this modern insovation in school work will soon be actively engaged in equipping the boys and girls for a technical and intelligent meeting of the conditions that arise on the farm.

Among the noted speakers who appeared on the scene in the forenoon were Rev. Frank Willis Barnett, of the Birmingham News and Hon. J. B. Atkinson, of Clanton.

After a sumptious dinner spread by the ladies the crowd again assembled and listened to an able address by Hon. W. D. Hobdy, the great school promoter of Alabama and Mr. A. B. Baxley, State manager of the U. F. of A.

The exercises of the day were all great and in line with the education spirit that dominates that thriving and progressive center.

THE CANNING FACTORY

Tuesday we went down and took the once over of the Canning Factory in active operation.

Mechanically it is perfect. In operation it makes no mistakes. In cleanliness it is a wonder. The most fastidious epicure in the land can well afford to eat the product from there. To make assurance doubly sure, the fruit is constantly under the supervision of a bevy of ladies, young ladies and Misses, which is an additional guarantee of excellence and cleanliness.

Wagons and trucks were lined up outside unloading quantities of fine tomatoes. Graders came next and nothing but sound, ripe tomatoes got by them. The entire system from the wagon to the can works as smooth as oil. Organization must be the middle name of Mr. Dixon, the general manager.

One natural and to be expected discordant note marred the general routine of perfection and that was the complaint of some of the growers at the necessary culling process that necessarily must take place.

In the first place all should bear in mind that this is our first experience in handling fruit in large quantities for canning. We must learn to protect our product and deliver it in good order, or it will be worthless to the factory.

They have to go into the market with a high grade product or they can not hope to meet competition. To produce this high grade product they must have a carefully grown, picked, packed and hauled and handled lot of raw material. They can not afford to put on the market either bruised, specked, rotten or green fruit. So, you see how it is.

This has been the most unfavorable year we have ever known for growing perfect tomatoes. Even the private garden has made almost a failure this season.

Let us take all of these things into consideration and next season, with all of the facts before us, let us go at the business in a business way and success and satisfaction will be assured on all sides.

The output already this year is well over 6000 cans.

HIGH-SCHOOL COLUMN

("The Submarine Attack.")

Fog and mist were everywhere. The ship was steadily plowing its way through the turbulent and perilous sea. On the forecastle the seaman on anchor watch marched with his steady tramp; tramp; tramp; across the liner prow. Within the ship all was quiet. The duties of each man who made up the ship's crew had been assigned and orders given to perform the tasks with as little noise as possible.* In another quarter of the sea there lay the enemy, silent and waiting for the on-coming vessel. The man at the detectephone had his ear trained to catch the sounds of the pulsating engine. At a critical moment, the submarine sends forth a torpedo to work its deadly and cowardly work. The result is apparent.

But you are perhaps wondering what that has to do with the administration of a high school. If I am able to carry through the comparison which I have started you will see the point. The principal is the man on the forecastle; the ship is the school; the crew are the teachers; and the submarine is an enemy of the school or of the pilot. Such an enemy usually hangs around the street corner and listens to every bit of gossip which goes out. He never visits the school to learn for himself if the things which he hears are true, but accepts them and immediately becomes the most wise, yea the best informed person in the county as to the status of affairs at the high school. I wonder if you have ever heard any body talking about a school anywhere or at any time who reminds you of the case I have just described.

If all the things are true which I have heard then it is high time some of the parents were waking up to the acts of their children. I do not believe half I hear because I know some of it was spurred by an ugly feeling of it was spurred by an ugly feeling Then again, if it is true, the school is not altogether to blame. There are in any school pupils of all classes socially and morally. Which class your child is in does not depend on the school near so much as upon YOU.

Miss Johnson will teach Expression at the high school and at the elementary school. Those who expressed the hope last spring that I get an Expression teacher now have a chance to show whether they really wanted such a teacher or whether they were just talking. She also teaches Novelty arts. This course will be open to any resident of the town or county. To take Novelty arts, one does not have to enroll as a regular student. He or she. (the course is principally for women,) will be asked to enroll as a special student to come only for the class and then return to his or her home. Tuition will be charged for Miss Johnson's courses the same as for Music courses.

Respectfully,

J. C. VEAZEY WRITES OF HIS SOUTH ALABAMA TRIP

I have just returned from Baldwin county, where I have been for one month, helping the people sing.

It was a fine outing for a man that has always stayed at home. Baldwin is a fine farming or trucking county, with long roads running on section lines, with beautiful Satsuma grass ranging in size from five to one hundred acres, also nice pecan groves.

The truck crops consist mainly of Cucumbers. Irish potatoes and sweet potatoes. Mr. Campbell, formerly of Chilton, near Jemison told me that he gathered eleven hundred dollars worth of Irish potatoes from ten acres and he now has a fine crop of corn on the same land. I think this second crop will yield fifteen or twenty bushels of corn per acre.

Mr. Victor Abicrumbia another Chiltonian, from near Randolph grew more than three hundred dollars worth of cucumbers from three fourths of an acre.

Mr. J. Lee Palmer formerly of this place gathered his sweet potatoes while I was there, and from four acres he gathered more than five hundred dollars worth.

So you see they have a pay day once and awhile.

I met quite a number from old Chilton I will mention some of them viz. Northcutt, Campbell, Killingsworth, Thames, Abicroumbia, Palmer, Waldop Hawkins and others. They are all doing well, seemingly. I visited but spent the most of my time hospitable home of J. Lee and enjoyed it very much.

visited Pensacola while there, back via Fairhope, across the Bay to Mobile. So all in all I had a real nice trip. Just could'nt help it when I was among such nice genial people.

And by the way our singing school was a success.

TO TOMATO GROWERS

Clanton, Ala., Aug. 141923.

As there seems to be some misunderstanding about some things concerning the canning factory, I am writing this letter to clear these misunderstandings. First, in regard to the price paid for tomatoes. The agreement with the grower at the time he signed the contract to grow tomatoes, was that the grower should get all of the money their tomatoes sold for when they were canned after the expense of canning was paid and ¼ cent per per can was taken out to pay interest on the money invested. And this is what will be done: As most of the growers do not want to wait until all of the tomatoes are sold to get some money on their tomatoes, they are to be paid $12.00 per ton first, then after the tomatoes are sold they will be paid the rest of their money. The amount that will be paid this second time will depend upon how much profit the factory makes. And right here is where it will pay the grower to bring in tomatoes in the proper condition. If the tomatoes are so green they cannot be used, the factory will make very little profit and the grower will get only a small second payment. If the tomatoes are ripe so all of them can be used and the canned goods will be first class so it will sell at a good price, then the factory will make a nice profit and the grower will get a nice second payment. Keep this in mind and remember that at other canning factories the growers furnish tomatoes of the proper ripeness and we can and should do the same thing. Also at most canning factories $12.00 per ton is all the growers are paid.

We will get more than $12.00 per ton for our tomatoes, but even if we did not we would make as much or more money on tomatoes as on cotton. We have been raising cotton all our lives and have never made a profit raising it unless it was during the war. If we failed one year we put more in next year. Have we tried tomatoes? One man who has ½ acre in tomatoes told me last week that he had not put in a full days work altogether since he planted them and they were looking fine.

Therefore practically all of the work he will have to do with his tomatoes is to haul them to the factory. How many days do we have to put in on each acre of cotton to produce it? And how much of the cotton does the boll weevil get? Boll weevils do not bother tomatoes. Worms do, but they can be absolutely destroyed by spraying two or three times at very little expense.

The mistake nearly every grower made this year was in planting too small an acreage. It takes as much time to haul 100lbs of tomatoes to the factory as it does 900 lbs. If each man had two or more acres planted to tomatoes instead of one half acre it would not take any more time to do the hauling or only a little more time and then he could make a real profit on them. We all know this has been a hard year on everything and we got a late start on our tomatoes. Next year we can do better.

Now, the thing to do is to take all of the tomatoes to the factory when they get ripe enough to can. Then next year plant two or three acres instead of 1-2 acre and let's not let King Cotton rule us always.

My only purpose in writing this article and in giving my time to the canning factory is to help the farmers of Chilton county—members of the United Farmers—to get more money from their farms. I sincerely hope that my efforts may not be in vain.

Yours truly,
O. H. MASTIN

U. F. of A. BARBECUE

Out at Sardis last Saturday the United Farmers of America treated their friends and themselves to what you might call a real barbecue.

As is customary on such occassions, a large crowd assembled, and a genuine good time resulted.

A number of good speakers entertained and instructed the crowd, among them being A. B. Baxley, Rev. C. D. Messer, Prof Ira Pegues and county manager for the U. F. of A., Mastin.

As usual it was our misfortune to be absent, and the clever gentlemen who agreed to report the affair for us "laid down on the job" and failed to come across.

Suffice it to say, however, that the occasion was a most enjoyable one from every stand point, and last but most important of all, everybody had plenty to eat and some to spare.

HALL OF JULIA BEAUCHAMP

Order of Eastern Star, Number 271

Clanton, Ala., May 9 1923

To the worthy Matron, Officers, and Members of Julia Beauchamp
Chapter Order of the Eastern Star,
Number 271.

We the undersigned committee respectfully beg leave to submit for your approval and adoption the following preambles and resolutions:

Josephh P. VanDeveer was born in the city of Montgomery on November 30th, 1858. Residing here during his [illegible] he received a good training and a generous education at the hands of good parentage. He was graduated from Georgetown College when a young [illegible] removing to Clear Creek where he was engaged in farming [illegible] about thirty years of age. While there he married Miss Cornelia [illegible] of Montevallo, Alabama, about the year 1880, who now survives his death. [illegible] VanDeveer next removed to Jemison, Alabama remaining there only two years. It was in Jemison that our brother received his first degrees in Masonry in the year 1891 from Jemison Lodge Number 411. Also while residing in Jemison Brother VanDeveer was elected to the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, which necessiated his moving to Clanton where he spent the remainder of his years. After the expiration of his term as Circuit Clerk, he served in the capacity of tax adjuster and abstracting land titles until that office was abolished four years ago. Since that time and until his death he was engaged in the Real Estate and Insurance business.

His Masonic and public activities were quite extensive. He was the author of the Charter of the Town of Clanton under which the Town now labors, also serving in the capacity of Mayor and councilman. He installed the first Electric Light plant in the County about the year 1908. He was one of the Charter members of Julia Beauchamp Chapter and served as first Worthy Patron. Brother VandeVeer received the Baptismal Rites of the Baptist Church of Clanton along with his younger daughter Bessie about fifteen years prior to his death. He is survived by one son, John M. VanDeveer, and two daughters Pattie Mae Powe and Mrs. Bessie Richards and by his widow Cornelia E. VanDerveer, two of his sons, William P., and Joseph P. Jr., having died several years previous.

His remains were laid to rest with Masonic honors at Clanton Cemetery on May 7th 1923. The Knight Templars officiating with the other lodges of which he was a member assisting accompanied by members of Jemison Lodge and other Masons and numerous friends. The Reverend S. J. Ezell of the Clanton Baptist Church conducted the funeral services assisted by the Reverend Charles C. Wilkerson of the Clanton Methodist church.

Whereas the Great Giver of life has seen fit to take from our friend and brother the life with which he was so richly bestowed, and on Saturday afternoon, on May the fifth 1923, while he was in the confines of his home, and at peace with the world just as the evening sun was closing so it was that the evening sun of our friend was closing, and he was taken to peace and rest with his Fathers.

Therefore since it is so, it is meet that we, should pay the last respects to our departed dead, and utter semblance of condolences to the bereaved family.

Therefore be it resolved by Julia Beauchamp Chapter, that in the death of Brother VanDerveer the community has lost a good and valuable citizen.

Be it further resolved by this Chapter that his family has lost a kind and affectionate husband and father, and that in this their ineffable loss may they be comforted by the thought that he has gone to reap his reward for the good deeds done on this earth, where as our poet said:

And the night shall be filled with Music,
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs,
And as silently pass away.

Be it lastly resolved, that in the death of our brother a void has been made a chair left vacant. As of one accord this Chapter regretfully pays its last tribute of respect to the worthy dead. His loving smile and kindness were characteristics of which we all mourn their loss and shall greatly miss their presence. His Masonic career was prompted by the spirit that Masonry unites men of every sect, country and opinion, and this same spirit was carried along in his connection with the work of the Eastern Star. he was a friend to the oppressed, and it was said of him that he could see something of good in every one. He was a man and citizen of rare culture and a source of honest information to the old and young alike, of strong convictions of high intelligence and of the old school, where chivalry held the sway and a man must be a gentlemen above all else. He was a man with a big heart of sympathy, and was always on hand to attend the sick and bury the dead His greatest spirit was his fraternal one and truly he was a friend to man. As he grew old his kindness mellowed with age, and his age was beautified with grace. He now lies in the majestic arms of death, but his goodness on this earth shall be felt down through the ages.

We beg to suggest that a copy of these resolutions be furnished the widow and family of our deceased brother.

Respectfully submitted,
J. C. JONES,
Mrs. Celeste Hayes,
Mrs. Elizabeth Higgins.

IF your dwelling and barns should burn tonight, how would you answer your neighbors' questions? "Was it insured?" That is the first thought in the mind of every one who sees valuable property going up in smoke. What would you say? Perhaps you have an insurance policy but is it adequate? Is it so arranged that it fits your needs and the special requirements of your farm? Insurance must be adapted to the property that it covers. Call on this agency of the Hartford Fire Insurance Co.

IS THE LITERARY DIGEST PRO-CATHOLIC?

It has been openly charged that the Literary Digest which is used as a texbook in many Alabama schools is pro-Catholic. There have been certain things that made us believe the charge is true.

Dr. George C. Wilding of East Orange, N. J., sends us the following clipping which, if it is correct, should be sufficient answer for anybody:

The Central Christian Advocate passes on this bit of interesting information which may be explanatory of some things: 'Yet here it is in the New York World, the big Catholic official of Chicago: "As it happens, the owner of the Literary Digest is a Catholic, and an exceedinly good one. To allege that the journal is anti-Catholic is not true." The question is answered.

The Birmingham police made an average of 30 arrests per day during the last month. Enforcement of the traffic laws and the city treasury was greatly enriched thereby. Just a hint to Clanton.

The City has had some splendid garbage cans placed all over the down town district and a daily dumping of same by the city truck. The next thing now is to force everybody to put their garbage in them and not on the sidewalks and streets.

UNITED FARMERS CANNING CO

The formation of this campaign began some weeks ago and like all other institutions of a constructive nature, had the opposing side. Many spoke of the canning company just as they did the United Farmers of America when the organization was introduced here only one year ago, saying "It can't be done" and we see now that such a prophecy was wholly without foundation.

The United Farmers of America is putting into operation certain principles that no other organization on record has been able to do, "and day by day, in every way, is getting better and better."

Now, we have that pessimistic class of people who speak of the canning factory just as some spoke of the organization in the beginning. I wonder how long it would take this class of people to build a town. It is a real pity that these chronic kickers do not kick clear out of town and stay out. It is rather amusing to see a man make a mule of himself by announcing and declaring any enterprise a failure before he has seen it tried out or given a chance, and that poor fellow who has the disease of "running off at the mouth," if he is not careful he will let folks find out how much he knows.

The United Canning Co. has for its Board of Directors and Officers: W. T. Bean President, J. P. Lawrence 1st vice pres. D. O. Manning 2nd. Vice Pres. O. H. Mastin Sec. Tres. and J. B. Gardner.

I predict that with these men in the lead and with J. W. Dixon Manager, [illegible] months from today the canning factory will have many friends [illegible] men and women that it really can't claim today.

The factory is now running full blast and so far as I am able to tell is putting up a product second to none of its kind. The public price being paid for tomatoes is $12.00 per ton and then when the season is over each man who signed the contract will share in the profits in proportion to the amount of tomatoes that he delivered to the factory. This will amount to a good deal more than the average acre will make in cotton. Keep books on it and see. Then next year we will start in with strawberries, English peas, tomatoes, beans, sweet potatoes, and pumpkins. This will give us about [illegible] months run.

Now come on fellows let's try boosting a while. If you can't boost just step out of town and let a man get there [illegible].

Yours for real cooperation,
A. B. BAXLEY.

NOTICE!

All members of Enterprise Local No. 216 U. F. of A. are earnestly requested at our next meeting—Friday night August 17, as very important matters are coming before us.

E. R. PETERSON NOT GUILTY OF BURGLARY

Owing to the fact that so much interest has been aroused in the burglary of my home, I wish to state some facts to the public in connection with this matter.

At first circumstancial evidence was so strong that it seemed that there was no doubt as to E. R. Peterson's guilt. Since that time, we have received information that causes us to believe that Peterson is not guilty. My mind is not satisfied as to who is guilty and probably will never be.

I went to Speigners last Sunday to investigate Will Coleman's confession. Most of his statements are very inaccurate, but the prison officials are so positive that Coleman is the one who broke into my home that I am willing to [illegible] by their decision [illegible] concerned, no further [illegible] to have Peterson [illegible] court of any other [illegible] first opinion that Peterson was guilty, but I did not want him punished so long as there [illegible] doubt in this matter. Now I every one who investigated this [illegible] same opinion that I [illegible] and I do not want people to think that I was the only person who [illegible] thought that Peterson was guilty.

The Railroads Pay Large Sums in Taxes

Few people know the amount of taxes paid into the public funds by the railroads—to be used in building better streets and roads; establishing and operating schools; promoting sanitary and health conditions; maintaining police and governmental regulations; and for all of the other things for which public money is spent in order to make the community a better place in which to live. These through taxes, the railroads certainly contribute their full share of the cost of civic progress in every community.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad pays annually in State, County and City taxes, in the 13 states in which it operates, the vast sum of four million six hundred and eighty six thousand one hundred and forty nine dollars ($4,686,149.)

These figures show the importance of the L. & N. as a tax payer and an aid in community building throughout the territory it serves.

PATE'S CHAPEL

The week of August the fourth to eleventh was a glorious week for Pate's Chapel church for several new He was a friend to the defenceless and soldiers for Jesue Christ were added to the church and the faith of many of the old members strengthened. It did not take long for Rev. Lowery and Rev. E. A. Scott to get the members of the church to see their duty and an awakening of the church to its duties was the result.

Our faithful Pastor, Rev. Lowery worked hard during the revival. Let us say that Brother Lowery is one of the best pastor's we have ever had at this place. He is a Godly man, one whom we can all trust to lead us in the ways of righteousness, one that every one who meets him cannot help but like him, or talk with him and [illegible] smile and love him

Let the people of Pate's Chapel not forget to keep up the revival of the [illegible] nor let the spirit die. Are we [illegible] to forget what we were taught [illegible] the meeting and fall into our [illegible] ways? No! Let us keep up the good work be loyal to our community, ourselves, our home and our God.

We hope that we may meet up with Brother Scott again. He labored [illegible] while he was with us. He is a young man who will graduate [illegible] Baptist Seminary in Louisville, Ky.

Last Sunday afternoon the Pate's Chapel [illegible] elected Mr. J. F. Robinson [illegible] as president. He told the people not to notice it if a mistake was made for some one else might make it. For some time we have been letting our singing drag afong but now we have it going again. Directors were Sybel Maddox, Hazel Maddox, Emily Pate Nora Maddox Callie Edwards, Mee Maddox Agnes Maddox, Fannie Pate, Zemma Hayes, and Chester A Maddox. Organist were Mrs. Nora Maddox and Miss Mag Maddox. We are expecting to have a fine singing next fourth Sunday evening and invite any one who may wish to come and be with us.

REVIVAL AT SAMARIA

We are requested to announse that revival services at Samaria church will begin Sunday August 19.

Everybody is invited to attend.

NOTICE OF GOOD ROAD MEETING

The Commissioner's Court wishes to call attention of the people of Chilton County to a very important meeting in regard to the building and improvement of the roads of our county which is to be held at the courthouse on Saturday, the 25th day of August, at 10:00 o'clock a. m.

Chilton County is now on the era of better road building, as we have the gasoline tax which as the law says must be applied upon the roads. In compliance with this the Commissioner's Court has purchased one tractor and one road machine for each Commissioners district to be used exclusively on the roads. It is a purpose of the Commissioners Court to make several changes in the method of working the roads and we are anxious to have the suggestion and criticisms of all the people of the county regardless of your political faith. As stated above with the additional tax now coming in from the gasoline and which will probably come from other sources it is the purpose of the court to construct and maintain and improve the roads of this county in a manner in keeping with the improvements of the times.

One change the court is contemplating making is to permit all hands pay a road compensation in place of working. We especially urge all the appportioners and overseers to be present at this meeting. Let us also urge both county papers to give their support to this now project and at all times stand ready to cooperate with the court, as we believe the good roads will be of a benefit to the people of our county. We are expecting to have with us on that day the Probate Judge of Talladega County who is an expert on goied road building to make a speech on the subject.

Of course it will take some time to get this under way and in the meantime the court urges all the portioners and overseers to see that every road hand, subject to road duty work the ten days as required by law, and do not wait until the winter rains set in, but commence filling up the muddy places and repairing the roads now while plenty of dry material is accessible.

In conclusion let us urge all the citizens of the county to be present at this meeting and come prepared to offer suggestions and make criticisms and corporate with the county in its endeavor to have good roads over the entire territory of Chilton County.

Very respectfully,

L. H. Reynolds, Chrm.
T. J. Dorminey,
Wiley Littlejohn,
C. F. Walker,

FATAL AUTO ACCIDENT

Last Sunday afternoon Mr. J. C. Pattillo and wife, prominent and popular residents of Verbena, made an auto trip out to Mitchell Dam.

As they were returning up a long and rather steep grade just this side of the dam, another car came meeting them that seemed to be from under control or being very recklessly driven. It was performing in such a manner that Mrs. Pattillo became frightened and alighted from their car, which Mr. Pattillo had halted for the other car to pass, and walked to the rear of their car in an effort to get out of the way. Her husband did not know of her position and, as the wild car approached, to avoid, if possible, a collision, he reversed his car and backed up suddenly.

Mrs. Pattillo, being just in the rear of the car, was knocked down, the car passing over her body and received wounds from which she died soon after reaching the hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Pattillo were both highly esteemed by the good people of Verbena and of the county and this lamentable accident has cast a shadow of gloom both far and near.

The Chilton County News begs to extend to the awfully bereaved husband its most earnest and heartfelt sympathy.

THE MODERN WAY

For instance, the Alabama Power Company gave a demonstration last Tuesday afternoon at their downtown office of the very latest in culinary development.

A couple of handsome electric ranges were set up and a great variety of luscious dainties, as well as substantial food, was cooked to a turn without any smoke, soot or dirt. The average parlor would have been adorned by the outfit and not messed up at all by the process of cooking.

The women who securesone of these wonderful ranges will find all of the drudgery of cooking eliminated and instead of dreading the ordeal of preparing a meal it will become a real treat to be looked forward to with pleasure.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FRIDAY

As was announced in the News last week appropriate memorial exercises were held at the Court House at 2 p. m. Friday as a tribute of respect to the burial of our president.

A very large crowd gathered from all parts of the county and the court house could not begin to care for the throng who were on hand, eager to participate in such a proper a loyal demonstration.

The program announced last week was the basis for the exercises and was carried out so far as was possible.

Dr. Suavely, President of the Birmingham Southern College, who was induced into his present office by President Harding during his visit to Birmingham two years ago, was the principal orator of the occassion, and his address was especially interesting as a brief biographical sketch of the dead president's life.

Col. J. Osmond Middleton introduced the speaker in his usual happy and felicitous manner.

The occasion was a success in every detail and Clanton and Chilton county may well congratulate themselves that this section was not remiss in paying this last tribute of honor and respect to the "foremost man in all the world, the president of this great land of freedom."

DO THE PEOPLE RULE ALABAMA

The suggestion and even charge, that the present agitation against convict leasing in Alabama results from a selfish program of the United Mine Workers is an insult to the intelligence and good intentions of the majority of the people of Alabama. The United Mine Workers came into the fight at a late date, and after conscientious and leading citizens of this state had united in a strong demand for an inherent pride of the people of this state and their desire to escape the infamy of a continuation of the lease system.

Equally unfounded are the efforts to make it appear that the condition of the leased convict is an ineffably happy one whence he would not escape even if given the opportunity. The arguments intended to minimize the bad situation fall back upon themselves, for the people are not deceived. well knowing that for the most part such arguments emanate from those who privately profit from convict leasing. Instead of the cruelty having been exaggerated, it is safe to say that neither the half nor the tenth has ever been told.

The legislature has been marking time on this situation when it might easily have won public confidence and esteem by its early abolition. There is no possible reason that can be defended for continuing the practice. The only ones who profit from leasing are the mining operators and others who lease convicts and enjoy additional margin the low cost labor brings them.

If private concerns can [illegible] hugely from convict labor, [illegible] is most woefully mismanaging its affairs when it fails to reap that profit itself in the public behalf.

About the first Sunday in September a big drive will be put on to boost Sunday School work again. Get ready to go and do all your Sunday brohemic before that time.

THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

Power Dams Making Rivers Navigable

Power dams being erected by Alabama Power Company at various points are gradually opening up Alabama's rivers to navigation at no expense to the State or Federal Government, except for purely navigation structures, such as locks, etc.

The Cherokee Bluffs dam, through the storage of waters during floods and their release in times of drought, will provide a 4½-foot navigation stage the year around in the Alabama River to Mobile.

40 MILES have been and 340 MILES will be made navigable on these rivers through the erection of these power dams by Alabama Power Company.

During a period of 55 YEARS the Federal Government expended $2,686,583.20 for improving navigation on the Coosa River between Rome, Ga., and Wetumpka, Ala., although only 36 MILES of the river, between Greensport and Riverside, were actually made navigable.

In 12 YEARS Alabama Power Company has opened 40 MILES of the Coosa River to 6-foot navigation, and in 3 MORE YEARS will have provided 4½-foot navigation on 340 MILES of the Alabama River; all at no expense to the State or Federal Government.

Alabama Power Company acts as an agent of the United States in constructing these power developments on account of their effect upon navigation. The Government might construct these dams at its own expense, but Congress prefers to obtain the improvement of navigation through private agencies at no expense, which it is doing through the medium of power developments under the Federal Water Power Act.

The power developments made by Alabama Power Company are a part of a comprehensive plan to make these rivers navigable. Each project must be at the exact location and of the specific height designated by U. S. Government engineers so as to open Alabama's rivers to navigation.

A RIGHT PLAN

Since the legislature decided to divide all of the gasoline tax equally among the counties it looks like the time has arrived when the farmers can have some passable roads

This money is to be spent for no other purpose than for road work and with something like $1,600 per month coming into the county, it looks like, if it is properly applied and efficiently placed and spent, the farmers in the rural districts should soon have a few real roads to haul their produce over, instead of ditches gullies and bog holes.

Our idea would be to repair the county bridges as soon as possible and make them safe on all the public roads, but as the state is going to take over and change the route of the B. & M. highway at an early date, it would be folly to spend anything more on that road at present than just enough to keep it passable.

The bulk of the money should go on the rural roads, commencing with the ones that serve the largest number of people first, and continuing until every public road in the county was brought up to point where all traffic could be handled at all seasons of the year.

Another thing that would tend to insure intelligent work on the roads, would be the employment of a county Engineer, whose duty it would be to direct and supervise all of the work done on the roads and bridges and have this work done with an eye to the future, so as to avoid, as far as possible the necessity of a re-working every time it rains.

Road building is an exact science, and the services of a competent civil engineer is one of the indispensible elements required in building a real, permanent road.

These suggestions are offered in good faith, and with only a desire to aid in obtaining a real road building program that will give the rural citizens some chance to travel.

A SPLENDID PICTURE

A few Sunday's since we were at the Baptist Sunday School.

When the opening hour arrived the young men's class marched upon the rostrum and took charge of the services.

They were all hale, hearty and hand some young men, but we venture to say they never appeared under any circumstances when they looked so altogether handsome and irresistable as at that hour.

Young men lkie these arer the hope of the future and a glimpse at a picture like they made on that rostrum reassures us all, and inspires us to feel like the future of our country will be safe in their hands

Mr. Zeb Mahan and family are moving from Vida to Prattville this week where Mr. Mahan will become local manager for the Alabama Power Company, they having added Prattville to their chain of power towns.

WHAT CLANTON NEEDS

Perhaps there is no other expenditure that would profit the merchants and other business inferests of Clanton more than to establish, in the down town shopping district a neat and comfortable rest room for the ladies who come in on shopping excursions.

If you will think a moment you can but realize what an inestimable source of convenience and comfort such a place would afford to the ladies who come to town and spend the greater part of the day.

Another thing that would be a boon to the rural public and a most humane consideration for dumb brutes would be a public watering place for the tired horses and mules that patiently drag the produce in and the merchandise back to and from the farms.

Both of these things would favorably advertise our town and enhance our trade.

Take them or leave them, both of these concessions to the convenience of our customers should be made.

OPEN COTTON

Mr. R. W. Milford, who lives about four miles west of Clanton, brought us in a sample of open cotton last week, too late for mention.

Mr. Milford says the crop is going to be extreemly short in his section this year.

STRUCK BY LIGHTENING

News reached town Saturday after noon that lightening had struck the home of Mr. Ed Kelly, near Maple Springs church, and seriously injured five persons.

As we all remember, quite a heavy cloud came up about 10:30 or 11 o'clock Sunday morning and it was during this down pour that the bolt came. A number of people on the way to church were driven in at the home of Mr Kelly by the rainand were in the house at the time. All were shocked more or less and five, including the baby of Mr. and Mrs. Kelly, were quite severly hurt.

DOING GOOD SERVICE

The turn to the right stands recently installed by the city are proving wonderfully helpful in directing traffic.

The one near the Wilson Hotel, where the highway intersects second avenue is especially servicable. The danger of accidents on that corner is almost entirely eliminated if all drivers will observe the direction. Most of them do, but now and then a fellow with criminal instincts comes along and dodges around the corner on the left hand.

A CORRECTION

Not being able to attend the school exercises at Isabella last week, our report in the paper failed to be complete.

One important ommission that we made was our failure to mention the fact that Senator Sam M. Adams was present and delivered a masterly address on education. His speech has been highly commended and endorsed by those who were present and had the pleasure of hearing it.

EVADING THE TRUTH

Prof. Nelson, of Stanton College, in Pennsylvania, a supposed authority on sociology and its kindred ramifications, assumes in his statement that children of college age are more depraved and less amendable to discipline now than in former years, and then proceeds to lay the blame on the parents.

That is the most illogical subtrefuge and the lamest argument we ever heard. During the last ten years the schools have , more and more, taken over the controll of our children and it is base begging of the question, if conditions are such as he claims, to undertake to place the failure of the paternalism of the modern school system on the shoulders of the parents.

What has produced an increased moral depravety of the parents? The same sociological laws and instrincts that govern the heart, soul, mind and affections of a parent today have predominated in the human species for all time. It is the dominant desire of them all that their children may have the best they can possibly provide, and the fervant desire of every heart is to see his offspring the best possible boy or girl that can exist on this peculiar planet. Then what an insane belief or insincere argument to charge that the parents are to blame for the moral turpitude and decadence of their children.

Speaking in the first personal singular, we know this is not the truth and so do thousands and thousands of other parents all over this christian land.

God knows, the parent has enough to be responsible for, without being saddled with the errors and failures of a school and social system that has contrived to evade his watchfull care d safe and sane guidance

SOME PEPPER

If the paper is unusally "hot" this week, Mr. Raymond Duffy, of Mt. Creek, is to blame. He brought us Saturday a bundle of the finest bell peper that can be grown. If the pods had been yellow we would have called them overgrown pumpkins. Thanks old boy. May the sand on your mail route harden into an asphalt highway.

MR. CLAUDE MARCUS SICK.

It was a great surprise to the many friends of Mr. Claud Marcus Sunday morning to learn that he had been rushed to the hospital and operated on for appendicitis Saturday night.

No one dreamed that a thing in the world could be the matter with him, he was so active and such a hustler all the time, and even Saturday he was stirring around in apparent perfect health. But late in the afternoon he was stricken and by 9 o'clock it became necessary to operate to save his life.

We learn that he is doing fairly well now and everyone hopes to see him out again right away good as new. He is the eldest son of Dr. T. J. Marcus.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express to our many friends our fervant thanks for their sympathy and kindness extended to us in our recent sad bereavement in the loss of our son.

CHILTON COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL OPENS THURSDAY OF NEXT WEEK.

At eight thirty o'clock on the morning of August 30th, which will be Thursday of next week the Chilton County High School will open to enroll the Freshmen or pupils of the eight grade. Everybody is urged to enroll and get started the first day. At the end of every six weeks period final examinations will be given. This is a new role for the high school but I believe it will be beneficial, for it means a pupil can not loaf a whole term and then expect to cram up for mid-term or finals. It will require that a pupil do some work all during the term. The word has been passed down the line that the high schools must tighten up all over the State. The colleges are raising complaint that too many of the pupils are not thorough in their work. A considerable tightening was noticeable in the Summer schools of the Normal schools and colleges this summer. I hope we may have that said about us at the high school the coming session. Since we do have final examinations at the end of every six weeks, it is almost a necessity that a pupil get started on time or he will be so far behind that he cannot catch up by the time the first set of examinations come.

On Friday, the 31st, we will be ready to enroll the Sophmores, Juniors, and Seniors. That night will be the time for the opening exercises to the public. Everybody is invited whether pupil, patron, or friend.

As near as I can tell until the Faculty get here for a conference, the teachers will teach the subjects as given below.

Ira Pegues Latin and English III
J. A. Peterson Science and Athletics.
D. W. Dark Mathematics and Biology.
Miss Wynness Tate English and Hygiene.
Miss Inis Carter History and Home Economics
Miss Annie Johnson Expression.
Mrs. Barney M Roberts Music.

It is my understanding that Mrs. Middleton will open a studio somewhere near the high school. If so, those pupils who care to take Music from her will be allowed to do so.

Respectfully
IRA PEGUES.

TO ABOLISH CUT-OUTS

Thousands of people all over Alabama, and more especially in the cities and towns, have suffered for years from excruciating but useless noises caused by that device of torture, the automobile cut- out. Hundreds of accidents have occured because of failure to equip motor-vehicles with non-glaring lights. This can be remedied with no hardship upon or inconvenience to anyone. Non-glaring lights can be provided at small expense and would be beneficial to every auto driver in the state, whether in populous or rural districts. The Florence chamber of commerce has drawn a bill which will be introduced in the legislature providing that cut-outs on automobiles be abolished, requiring the use of non-glaring lights, and fixing penalties for violation of such a statute. The law is state-wide in its scope.

Automobiles are rapidly increasing in numbers and use throughout the state. They are not luxuries, but necessities. At best they necessarily create much noise and danger. They should be so regulated under law as to minimize their discomforts and hazzards to the public. The cut-out does not add to the pulling power of the car. Some of the best cars eliminate this feature purposely because of its uselessness and annoyance. In cities and towns it is hard to tranact business, to carry on school or church work or to hear one's voice on one's veranda because of these noises. Non-glaring lights for all cars should be required for the public safety. Every reasonable measure for protection in the use of motor-cars is desirable.

While this bill promises benefits, it is well to remember that enactment of additional laws for the public protection need arouse little hopes for relief until there is wider observance and enforcement of statutes and ordinances already in existence. It is the enforcement of laws by those who are sworn to do so that counts. One law properly enforced is worth a dozen permitted to go by the board. —Age Herald.

THE STORK CAME

At the hospital, Wednesday morning at 3 o'clock, the Stork arrived and left with Mr. and Mrs. Judson Strock a bouncing baby boy.

This is the first visit of that festive bird that Mr. Strock has any recollection of being personally interested in and the event, we dare say, will long be remembered by him.

We are happy to say that both the mother and baby are doing nicely.

SLOWLY IMPROVING

Dr. V. J. Gragg, who has been sick for several weeks, is able to be down in town occassionally in his car. He tells us that he thinks he is slowly improving. All of Clanton would be happy to see Dr. Gragg well again.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

What's the use to commit suicide. Just take a jaunt or two with an auto speedsters or a trip on an airplane. It will save you trouble and give you company to continue the journey with.

We are already making arrangements to have a reef taken in our other pair of pants. The tomato crop is almost over and we are due to "wink up" as soon as our supply gives out.

All of the cotton that will be made this year is already in grown bolls on the stalk. Look and see how many you have and then make your crop estimate.

The United States is a fairly big proposition, but they will have to grow a good deal before they can stand any hack in a fight with the Coal Trust, The Oil Trust or the Railroad Trust.

Think twice before you speak is probably very good advice in some instances. But the fellow who does [illegible] the guy whose think tank is like a vacuum cleaner.

President Coolidge is sorter marking time while he gets his bearings. We feel like he is wise in that respect and, while he may not accomplish any dazzling feats of statesmanship we predict that he will make very few glaring mistakes.

A great many negroes who emigrated North from this section in the early summer are arriving back home satisfied. They all say the North is no place for the negro. Neither the people nor the climate up there seems to understand nor appreciate them.

The most absolutely useless creature on God's earth must certainly be the individual who is always prating about how things should be said, and still, is never game enough to take hold of the plow handle and show the rest of the world how to plow.

Do you ever find it disappointing to go out to a "free lecture for the benefit of the people" and almost the [illegible] reads to pronounce it a real disinterested effort to help the people, they begin to ask for "pledges" or cash for the support of some project you know nothing about and care less?

These government reports on the cotton crop are always manifestly unjust to the farmer. In this matter the government is serving the speculator with advance knowledge at the expense of the farmer. They do no possible good, but a great deal of harm. Why don't the farmers demand their abolishment?

Cane grindings and syrup "billings" are not so very far off now. That is one of the beauties of life in the South. If we miss on one or two cylinders we always have others to depend on. They never all go dead at the same time. We have syrup, 'taters and 'possums to look forward to yet.

Combined capital is necessary in the doing of real big things. Not even a Henry Ford could or would make the vast developments that the Alabama Power Company has made, and is planning to make, in Alabama. It is wonderful to contemplate the great possibilities of industrial advancement they have opened up in our State. And the beauty of it is is, that most of it is being done with home money.

GETTING TOO "BROAD"

That great and good paper, the Birmingham News, appears to be rather encouraging and fostering a rambling, and in a great many incidents, a meaningless campaign in favor of the doctrine of evolution.

It is true, that on one or two occasions, when the water was getting a little too deep, and the inevitable conclusions of its correspondents were showing too clearly the trend of the lay mind to accept the gospel of evolution seriously and to follow it up to its legitimate conclusions, the News resorted to a ruse, and to explain that evolution and progress were synonomous terms in their minds and that by evolution they intended to convey the idea that all mental and material progress that had been made in the world they construed as the work of evolution.

To well trained and cultured minds, like those possessed by the editorial writers of the News, these hair splitting definitions are entirely satisfactory and satisfying, but to the average reader, who has heard of, and understood all of his life that evolution, as applied to the human species, means but one thing and that is the evolving of man from a monkey, this system of juggling with words means nothing, and he rest absolutely satisfied in his own mind that the great and influential Birmingham News has settled the question and that man has finally been established, on unimpeachable evidence, as the direct and lineal decendent of the monkey.

We have no idea that the euriditc and up-to-date editor of the News really intends for his readers to catalog him as a believer in the Darwinian theory of man's origin, but the fact remains that this by play on words is having its weight among the masses and is leading into error a number of persons who do not take the time to unravel the sophistries of the News.

Athesim Darwinianism and Infidelity stalk abroad in the land of the Bolshvick and are close attendants upon any country that is darkened by ignorance and superstitious, but where real enliglenment reigns and where the social conditions are pure and where real human progress is at work, they are conspicious by their absense.

It is a truth known of all men that wherever you find a country that is forging to the front in all of the higher elements of essential progress, you will find a country where God, and His story of the creation of man is accepted with an unquestioning faith, and where this triumvirate of heathenish invention never receives even a serious consideration.

These theories are all the evil machine nations of an idle and disordered brain, too feeble to make a mark on the sands of time by legitimate culture and so eager for notoriety that they pawn their manhood and their souls upon the vile alter of scepticism.

A PARTY PAPER

In just two weeks now the Chilton County News will be two years old. About 700 subscriptions will expire at that time and we hope for a renewal of every one. A democratic paper is a necessity if a party organization is maintained. To support a party paper is the duty of every democrat in the county. Without your support you can not hope to maintain one because they can not operate on thin air.

Change the management and the policy of the paper if you see fit, but it is necessary to keep it going unless you want your party to go dead. With your hearty support the paper will go forward. Without it we should expect to see it cease to exist. It is up to you.

A NEW NAME

The old reliable Sanitary Market upon moving in to new quarters, put away all old things and methods and became altogether new.

Even the name has been left behind, but absolute sanitation has become a very clear and definate fact under this new order of things.

It is now called the "Palace Market," and if you will look it over once you will conclude that it has the right name, for in every appointment it is perfect and its appearance bears out the idea of a palace.

It is now operated by an automatic electric system of refrigeration that is the very last word in the latest plans for cold storage. To be surpassed something better must be invented, for this is the very latest system adopted by cold storage experts.

As a test of the possibilities of this new plant, Mr. Marcus has kept a beef brisket roast in his refrigerator now for 20 days and upon close examination we found this roast to be absolutely sweet and pure and really in better condition for serving on the table than when first butchered.

He is in a new brick building. All of his furnishings are new and built in especially by him for his own use and the result really justifies the name of Palace.

Go around to his place, just beyond "Parrish's" and give it the once over. It will interest you and you will learn a whole lot. Mr. Marcus will be glad to show you through and explain the working of this new system.

CHILTON COUNTY MASONIC CONFERENCE

As previously announced in the local papers, the Chilton County Masonic Conference was in session, at the local Masonic hall, last Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

A splendid attendance was one of the notable features that was gratifying to the local Lodge. Masons from all over the county were on hand and the Lodge just over the county line, at Marbury was also well represented

The convocation of this assembly was primarily for the purpose of instruction and, in consequence, the sessions were all behind closed doors.

Rev. T. C. Jones, of Birmingham, member of Committee on work of Grand Lodge of Alabama, was present and assisted Col. J. B. Atkinson in the instruction work and lecture course that was given to the large assembly present. No man in Central Alabama has been more diligent and helpful to the cause of Masonry than Col. Atkinson.

Blankinship W. M.
Rev. Buford Lawrence, S. W.
W. . Griffin, J. W.
O. L. Reynolds, S. D.
J. L. Williams J. D.
H. A. Harris Sec.
G. C. Walker, Tyler.

The conference adjourned to meet with Marbury Lodge next year.

All in all, the session last week is pronounced by all who attended, a grand success. Much instructive work was given and the spirit manifested has certainly given the order of Masonry a big boost in Central Alabama.

FOOD FOR REFLECTION

(Washington Post)

With victims of accidents running above 15,000 annually, and with the number of injured exceeding 1,700,000, the loss in man power that the nation thus sustains becomes staggering. And to this is to be added the direct loss suffered by the families of those killed and the pain and suffering and loss sustained by the injured. And there is the loss in property that is to be figured in. One killed in automobile accident every fifty minutes, two hurt every minute. That is the present rate. Let motorists and pedestrains think on these figures and realize the terrific cost of carelessness.

HALL OF THE CHILTON COUNTY MASONIC CONFERENCE

To the Worshipful Master, Warden, and Brethern of the Chilton County Masonic Conference.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE CHILTON COUNTY MASONIC CONFERENCE in session at Clanton Alabama, from August 15th to 17th, both inclusive as follows:

That the Conference extends it's sincere thanks and appreciation to Clanton Lodge No. 423, A. F. and A. M., and to the entire community for its cordial reception and genuine hospitality. An especial appreciation is extended to the Wilson Hotel for it's manifold courtesies shown to the delegates in looking after their pleasure, welfare and comfort.

We are especially grateful to Brother Thomas Jones, member of the Committee on Work of the Grand Lodge of Alabama for his presence and for the able instructions given the Conference.

The thanks of the Conference are heartily extended to Brother J. B. Atkinson, District lecturer for Chilton and Bibb Counties, for his untiring efforts to make the Conference a success; and especially do we commend the Masonic zeal of Brother Atkinson, and we give his work and leadership our hearty endorsement.

We are greatly pleased by the large attendance of delegates representing [illegible] lodges in the County, including Marbury in Autauga County, and we rejoice at the fraternal spirit which was so prevalent during the entire Conference, which is typical of the fraternal spirit in that lodge beyond the grave—"that house not made with hands"—eternal in the Heavens.

DIED IN CALIFORNIA

Last Monday afternoon, at Mt. Pisgah church, the body of Carrel Yancy Holley, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Holley, of our county, was buried by Undertaker Martin.

The deceased was 28 years of age and died in the government hospital at Banning California, on August 14, of pulmonary tuberculosis contracted in France, while doing service in our army over there during the war.

It is supposed that the disease was produced from the effects of poison gas inhaled by him on the battle field.

His father and mother are both well and favorably known here and have a wide circle of friends. Mr. Holley has been for many years connected with the planing mill industry and is widely known by lumber dealers all over this section.

The government sent the body of their son back to them attended by the same undertaker who first cared for the remains. They arrived in Clanton on fast mail train No.2, at 10:30 in the morning and the burial followed as related in the afternoon.

Many relatives and friends accompanied the body to its last resting place to pay this last sad tribute to one who was a victim of the terrible war.

To Mr. and Mrs. Holley and the family the News extends its sympathy in this sad hour..

AN AMAZING SITUATION

Citizens of Alabama who put humanity above the dollar cannot fail to look with amazement upon the action of the House of Representatives last Friday in voting to retain on the adverse calendar the bill of Representative W. Y. Adams of Blount, which would have required the state to maintain compelte control, direction and supervision over the labor of state convicts. They are forced to ask what has come to pass which would force those elected as the representatives of the people of Alabama to say that "we care nothing for the well-being of those, who for the moment are the penal servants of the state, those who are required to give of their labor, under the laws which we or our predecessors in office enacted, in order that our will be done and society be protected."

The charitable view may be that the fifty-two who voted against the consideration of the measure did not know what was in the bill. If such be true, those who have knowledge of the proposal would urge them to read the bill so they may express their own thoughts rather than the thoughts of those who receive the benefits of a system which does not contemplate any supervision.

"Section 1. The state must in all cases where contracts for the hire of the labor of state convicts have been made, retain at all times complete control, direction and supervision of the labor of such convicts. No supervision or control of the labor of such convicts shall be exercised by anyone who is not the employee of and paid by the state and responsible only to the state.

"Section 2. No person shall be employed by the state to direct or supervise the labor of such convicts who is interested in the business of the person contracting for the hire of the labor of such convicts.

"Section 3. Any person in the employ of the person contracting for hire of labor of convicts who exercises or attempts to exercise any control or supervision of the labor of such convicts shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars. Any warden of the penitentiary or other person who has general supervision or control of convicts who shall knowingly permit a violation of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction must be fined not less than one hundred dollars."

This bill does not provide for the abolition of the convict lease system It even gives recognition to the system, which has been condemned by the forty-seven other states and for which only Alabama now stands sponsor. It does no more than say that Alabama convicts, leased to private interests which seem to grind in peanl servitude, must be constantly under the watchful eye of persons employed by the great state of Alabama, which is supposed to reflect the views of a majority of the two million odd people, who pay the taxes and lend the moral influence for the support of any government.

Yet fifty-two of the one hundred and six members of the House of Representatives say that no consideration whatever will be given to such a bill, that Alabama, the first state and the only state which gives legal recognition to a system of slavery, a system condemned by all others, a system which puts the brand of the dollar mark on every man who is condemned to penal servitude by a court of justice.

Surely, a court of justice should not be a place wherein a human being should receive the brand of the dollar mark.

Surely, the day must soon come when man's humanity to man will be given a higher position than man's desire for the dollar.—Montgomery Journal.

A Farmer Needs More than Fire Insurance

WHAT is insurance? It is a means of protecting one's self from unexpected losses. Now there is no business that is more liable to suffer such losses than that of farming. Hailstorms, for one thing, can ruin a crop and wipe out a whole year's income. The death of valuable live stock is another loss that hurts. The loss of stock while en route to market may cut so deeply into the proceeds of a sale as to wipe out profits. What are the hazards that confront you? Let this agency tell you how to safeguard your income.

The Buick Double-Service Sedan

Another 1924 Buick innovation—this six-cylinder double-service sedan—has been especially created for those who wish a combined practical business car and family sedan.

Its upholstery is comfortable, yet sufficiently serviceable to withstand severe daily usage. The power provided by its new Buick 70 H. P. valve-in-head motor is more than enough to carry it over the heaviest roads. Its staunch Buick four-wheel brakes assure ample safety whatever the driving conditions.

The admiration which you may feel for its service utility will be matched by the pride which your family will take in its comfort and suitability.

FACING CONDITIONS

We don't belong, at least intentionally, to the class of people known as calamity howlers, but we believe it is the part of wisdom to face the future with all of the forethought and preparation posible. And that is that.

We all are obliged to realize that taking weather conditions of the season into consideration, it would have been impossible to have made a full crop of cotton. If nothing else had been in the way cotton could not have matured anything like a full crop under the unfavorable conditions that have prevailed since planting time last spring.

Then whether all of the people realize it or not, the boll weevil is the most destructive pest that has ever attacked the cotton crop, bar none. They have been on the job this year ever since the young plant come up, and have had ample time and favorable weather conditions for propagation and we are obliged to know that they are here in larger numbers than ever before and they are not idle.

Our experience in the past has taught us that, after the third crop of weevils are hatched out they make a clean sweep of every form on the stalk, except the grown bolls that were made by the very first effort of the cotton to produce.

This year the cotton is late and the weevils are on time and we have no room in the world to hope that they will alter their habits and allow us to have a top crop.

Besides these conditions we have with us again the old catapillar, or army worm, that 30 years or so ago come on the scene, for a year or two and devoured everything in the land that even looked like cotton. They are here in quantities, and our recollection of them is that they are real hustlers, and if they run true to form the cotton fields will soon look like mid winter.

It is absolutely folly to look for anything but a very short crop. You need not cheat yourself into any other kind of a belief and the part of wisdom would be to begin now to discount this shortage in every possible way. Put your wits to work and figure up some way by which you can piece out, to somesextent, the loss on cotton.

Save all the hay you can rake up on your place. Save and cure your cane fodder when you gather your cane. Hang up your sweet potato vines and cure then when you dig potatoes. They make fine cow food in the winter. Save everything that has grown on the place and then begin right now to save your pennies Cut off every expense that can pos... and husband all of your resources for next year So much money is going out of this country to pay for fertilizer that scandalous little will be left and we have got to make that go just as far as we can Gird yourself and make a game fight. Let thrift and economy be your watchword, and, in the end, we will all get by and another crop time will soon arrive, when, with the lessons taught by 1923, we should all be better able to win back the losses of the present.

You Can't Starve and Beat Your Horse and Have Him Haul the Load
You can always tell what kind of a farmer a man is by the condition of his stock.
If his horses are lanky and lean, ill-fed and poorly cared for, you can set it down that he is not prosperous. If his wagons, machines and other farm implements are not kept in good condition, you know right away that he is not a successful farmer.
Every good farmer knows that it is the best policy to feed his stock well and repair his implements and take care of them. Then he will get the most service out of them and in the end make more money.
The railroads mean a great deal to the farmer, because they haul his produce to market and bring back to him the necessities and comforts of life. But the farmer must appreciate that a railroad cannot be built and maintained without money. Neither can it be run at a loss.
To Get Prompt Freight Service You Must Let The Railroads Earn Enough To Pay Expenses
Let the railroads earn rates high enough to pay expenses, to keep their equipment in good condition and to enable them to provide needed improvements. It will be cheaper for you in the end.
You cannot cut down freight rates and then expect the railroads to have all the freight cars you need, when you need them; and you cannot expect them to run their trains promptly when their tracks are not kept in good condition and their locomotives and cars are in bad shape.
You can starve a railroad any more than you can starve a horse, and quicker at that.

JEMISON HIGH SCHOOL

The Jemison High School will open Sept. 3. Last year we had to open in temporary quarters which almost equalled the permanent ones before we were out of them. The new building is now completed and ready for use. In spite of the above mentioned handicaps of last year, we were successful beyond all expections. This year we expect to outstrip anything done in the past. We have every reason to believe we shall. We have one of the best schools in the county. The State has placed us on the list of accredited schools of the state and that a graduate from here is admitted to any college in the State without examination.

Board can be had in private homes [illegible] rates. I shall be glad to answer any inquiry relative to the school, or to assist in finding a boarding place for any student [illegible]

REVIVAL AT BETH SALEM

Last week a glorious revival was enjoyed by the good people in the Beth Salem community.

Rev J. E. Norris, the pastor was ably assisted by Rev. J. E. George. The meeting lasted only four days but the Lord was present and richly blessed the work.

On Monday a funeral services occured there and seemed to sadden and chasten the entire meeting.

The only disagreeable feature of the occassion was a little bad order at one night service.

Sixteen were added to the church, while a genuine spirit of awakening appeared to rest on all the membership and the entire community.

Rev. George did some excellent preaching and the pastor was tirelessly in his labors for the reclaiming of souls.

The Baptist cause in this vicinity has been greatly strengthened and the church is looking forward now to an era of progress.

CLANTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL OPENS ON NEXT MONDAY

Please allow me to remind you that the Clanton Grammar School will open on next Monday, August 27th. The incidental fee will be the same as it was last year. You can get your receipts for this fee at the Alred Drug Store. Let me insist that you buy your text books before Sept. 1st, if possible, as the price of school books will advance 10 to 100% on that date.

I hope that I may have your cooperation in this school, for without it, it would be impossible to conduct a successful school. With your cooperation it would be possible for a very poor teacher to teach a successful school, but without your cooperation the best teacher in the country would fail. We earnestly ask you to give us a fair chance before offering any criticism.

I shall offer a list of suggestions through the county papers from time to time. I will thank you to read these suggestions and apply them as much as possible. Before offering these suggestions, they must meet the approval of the teachers and school board.

I know of nothing that will help the school so much as for us to have a friendly conversation in regard to the school and your children. If your child has any peculiarities or physical defects, please make this known to us before school opens.

Hoping that we may have your cooperation in conducting this school I am.

Yours truly

RESOLUTIONS MASONIC CONFERENCE

To the Worshipful Master, Wardens, and Bretheren of the Chilton County Masonic Conference.

We the undersigned Memorial committee beg leave to submit for your approval and adoption the following preambles and resolutions:

The Great Giver of life, in his infinite mercy, has deemed it necessary to take from our midst, since the last Masonic Conference the following Bretheren: J. B. Crysell of Jemison Lodge No. 411, Thomas M. Bosworth of Thorsby Lodge No. 759, I. O. Retherford and J. P. VanDerveer of Clanton Lodge No 423.

Therefore since it is so, it is but meet that we who have been spared should pay the last tribute of respect to our deceased dead and utter semblances of condolence to their bereaved families.

Therefore be it Resolved, by the Chilton County Masonic Conference that in the death of our Bretheren the County has lost good and valuable citizens, men who were loved and trusted.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, by this Conference that in the death of our Bretheren, their families have suffered an irreparable loss, and that in this their great loss and in this their hour of bereavement may their pangs of sorrow be ameliorated by the Divine thought that they have all gone to reap their rewards for the good deeds done on this earth. We extend to the families and relatives our heart felt sympathy and may the soothing hand of time remove the sting of death from the grave and place a crown of victory there.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that in our several lodges a great sadness has come over us for the loss of our Bretheren, and as of one accord this body regretfully memorializes our worthy dead. They were all good men and true, and learned the principle that Masonry unites men of every sect, country and opinion. It is so that darkness has come upon our Bretheren, but only to give forth brightness and a new day, with undiminished lustre, brighter and happier than any earthly one.

There has come to the attention of this Conference that J. C. Pattillo one of our Bretheren, has had taken from him a possession greater than life itself. We regretfully learned of the sad death of his loving wife which occured on August 12th. 1923. But it is not alone to the departed dead that we pay our respect but to the unfortunate living as well, to soothe the unhappy, to compassionate their miseries and to restore peace to their troubled minds is the great aim we have in view.

THEREFORE BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, by the Chilton County Masonic Conference that we as Brother Masons extend to Brother Pattillo our greatest sympathy in this his ineffable loss, and commend him to the Heavenly Father who alone can ease the heart aches of this world, where as the poet has said:

And the night shall be filled with music
And the cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents like the Arabs
And as silently pass away.

We beg to suggest that a copy of these resolutions be furnished the families of our departed Bretheren, and that a copy be spread upon the minutes of this Conference.

Respectfully submitted.

G. L. GRIFFIN,

May God bless and keep them.

ELLIS—MARTIN
Two of the Most Popular Young People of Clanton are Happily Married

Last evening, in the beautifully decorated parlors of the Upchurch home, Mr Latham Ellis and Miss Aura Belle Martin were quietly united in marriage, Dr. S. J. Ezell performing the ceremony in his usual happy and felicitous manner.

Both of these young people are popular favorites in Clanton social circles and have a large number of real friends who wish for them all the happiness that can go with life on this mundane sphere.

The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jno. T. Ellis, who are prominent in the business and religious life of Clanton. He is a partner in the well known firm of Jno. T. Ellis & Son and is a young man with a bright future.

The lovely bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Mell Martin, who are known and esteemed by this entire community. Both are active movers in every worthy cause that presents itself. As a bride Miss Martin was lovely beyond compare and, we all know how bright and lovable she is in every day life.

The Chilton County News is pleased to unite, with all of Clanton, in wishing for the happy pair a prosperous, happy and long life together with only clouds enough to make life's sun set beautiful.

BASE BALL

It looks like a team from a cotton mill town is a jinx for Clanton.

Tallassee has made a monkey out of our boys every time they crossed bats this year and, we believe Siluria has about done the same thing. At all events, Siluria took both games away from them last week on the home ground.

The great down pour of rain Tuesday deprived the Sylacauga team, (another Cotton Mill bunch) from showing us what kind of lint they carried on their bats.

As we understand it, the season has now closed for the Clanton team and the fans will have to begin to whet up their appetites for the foot ball war that will soon be on.

MONSTER RATTLER

Mr. Bob Atkinson was in town yesterday and told us of a monster rattlesnake that a Mr. Headley killed on the road between Kinchen and Wagner's store Tuesday.

It measured nearly 5 feet in length and had 21 rattles and a button.

Rattlesnakes seem to be numerous in that section, Mr. J. B. Crane killed the largest one we have heard of down there a few weeks ago. It had 27 rattles and was 6 feet long.

If you want real Tailor work done go to Frank Lowci he is a real tailor.

DON'T WANT A CHANGE

Thorsby, Ala., 8-29-23

Editor News:—

Please allow me space in your paper for a few lines in regard to the change in the route of the Highway.

I see from the daily papers that Senator S. M. Adams went before the Highway Commission and asked for a survey from Verbena to Thorsby.

I, and many others think the present survey is best. Keep the road on the east side of the railroad all the way

To follow the line of the old highway from Verbena, you have to cross the railroad four times. Grade crossings are dangerous and should be avoided. To stay on the east side of the railroad is much the straightest route.

Myself and many others, protest against any change, or new survey. We want it to stay on the east side of the railroad and do away with the danger of crossings.

Another thing. If we keep on changing and re-surveying, the upshot will be that Chilton county will get no highway at all For goodness sakes let the work begin and lets have a highway.

Yours truly,
J. BICE

MRS. GUY HIGGINS IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Guy Higgins was carried to a Montgomery hospital last Saturday for an operation.

Her many friends here will be happy to learn that the operation was successful and that Mrs. Higgins is improving as rapidly as could be expected.

A REAL THUNDER STORM

About 1:30 Tuesday afternoon the biggest rain and electric storm of the year struck Clanton.

Some wind preceeded the rain storm but not enough to result in any material damage.

The rain fell in such a deluge that the sewers were taxed to over capacity in some places down in town and the streets and pavements looked like rivers.

GET READY

Next Sunday, Sept 2. is the day set apart by both the Methodist and Baptist Sunday Schools to put on an intensive campaign for the purpose of increasing their enrollment for the fall and winter.

During the heated period of summer so many people have been absent on vacations and in search of rest and recuperation that the Sunday schools have been rather depleted in members.

Now, most of the wanderers have returned and settled down for the fall and winter grind, and the idea is to gather them back into the Sunday schools and get them lined up again.

Make your arrangements to be back in your old place next Sunday Vacation days are over and you are needed back on the job.

Don't sleep too late to be on hand promptly at 9:45 a. m.

SOUTH ALABAMA COTTON CROP VERY POOR.

Mr. Walter Gillispie, whose duties as a national law enforcement officer, carry him in to all parts of the state, was home for a day or so this week.

He has recently been operating in the southern part of the state, and being a natural born farmer, his report on crop conditions means something. He says that a very large acreage of cotton was planted down there almost to the exclusion of everything else, and that owing to the ravages of the boll weevil, the entire crop is practically a failure. He saw a great deal of cotton that will not make over a bale to 12 acres, and that too growing on land that, under favorable conditions, would produce a bale to every 2 acres.

Mr. Gillispie says the farmers in Chilton don't begin to realize what a real failure is unless they could see the crops down there.

ANNIVERSERY SERVICE

We are requested to announce that there will be a special Anniversary Service at the Baptist church next Sunday, Sept. 2.

An appropriate program will be arranged and Dr. Ezell, the pastor, will preach a sermon fitted to the occassion on the subject: "The Winning Plan and Spirit.

Every member of the church is especially urged to be present.

A FINE RECORD:

The summer school conducted by Prof. Wilson at the High School this year was a most successful session.

All of the 7th grade pupils made up their grades and passed without a hitch and only 3 of the freshmen failed to get by.

This is a splendid record and speaks well for the ability of Prof. Wilson as a teacher.

CHILTON HIGH OPENS

The Chilton County High School opens to-day.

Tommorrow night, at the auditorium, will be held the formal opening exercises. You are most cordially invited to attend.

Don't forget the date, Friday evening August 31, at 8 p. m.

MOVING AWAY

The family of Mr. H. T. Sims moved yesterday to Alexander City.

Clanton is sorry to lose good citizens like Mr. Sims. Our best wishes go with him.

FIRST BALE

On last Monday, August 27, Mr. Robert N. Connell, of Route 5, brought in the first bale of cotton to the Clanton market for 1923.

It was ginned by the Planters Gin Co. and sold to Mullins & Moore for 27 1-2 cents.

We hear that several other bales will be brought in during the week.

AN EARLY WINTER

Since we can remember it has been a saying that when the wild geese fly south early it means an early and cold winter. So much for that. We don't know whether that has anything to do with it or not, but we do know that it is phenomomally early for them to be touring south in August, still Mr. W. S. Shaw informs us that two or three droves have been seen to pass southward, along the line of the river, out at his mill just above Lock 12.

Now, if you believe in the wisdom of the geese, you are forewarned and can make your winter arrangements accordingly.

As for us, we expect to get along the best we can. If we can make it through the winter, well and good, if not, why we can chunk up the sponge and migrate.

A freeze that passed over the great lakes last week probably started the geese on their southward journey.

CLANTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL OPENED WITH LARGE ENROLLMENT

The Clanton Grammar School opened on Monday with an enrollment of about 250 pupils. There was no formal opening exercises on account of not having an auditorium. The visitors were distributed among the different classrooms, where each teacher took charge of the exercises in her room.

Miss Seawright is in charge of the first grade; Miss Addie Kemp of 2nd grade; Mrs. Floyd-Hayes, third grade; Mrs. [illegible] fifth grade; Miss Stubblefield, sixth grade; W. E. Martin, principal and seventh grade; Mrs. Horton, utility.

The school opened a little earlier this year than has been customary in order that the pupils might buy their books before the price advanced on Sept. 1, and also to prevent this school from closing the same time that the County High School closes.

ON GOOD ROADS

Thorsby, Ala.,

Editor News:

I attended the good roads meeting Saturday at Clanton, and it was clearly noticable that there is some interest taken in the county roads.

Well, I thought it would wake somebody up when we hit the bottom. The best thing I heard was that we take the road question out of politics This means that no politician hereafter shall claim the credit for good roads.

If we are successful in building good roads in Chilton county, I think this makes it broad enough for every citizen in the county to line up behind the movement and do his best to assist in having better roads.

The present conditions of our roads is a disgrace to any people and, in fact, almost beyond travelling in many places and our road system has been a complete failure. Traffic on the roads has more than doubled in the past ten years and the subjects to road duty have decreased. This, in a large measure, is why our roads have gone down.

So, we can no longer depend on the present system to maintain the public roads. I believe a man of road age should be taxed, say $10 and if he is unable to pay the cash give him a chance to work it out on the road at exactly the same price that is being paid for the same class of work by the county to those they hire. This is fair and it is nothing but fair that he should have this chance. Don't press a man because he is poor.

Second: I believe that every property owner in the county should be taxed to help maintain the roads. I believe the man who does the road the greatest injury should likewise bear the heaviest burden of taxation.

Remember, my friends, that "to-gether we stand, divided we fall." We [illegible] divided in Chilton county [illegible] on such questions as this [illegible] long and we [illegible] are without [illegible] erything but what is good for Chilton county.

Both parties have agreed to leave politics out of road building and maintaining, and if the meeting did not accomplish but this one item, it accomplished something worth while and something much needed

The greatest danger we have to contend with is that some smart Alec will try to do something next to impossible, like the question raised Saturday in regard to terraces being allowed to discharge their water into the public roads. In many cases this can not be avoided without great injury to the farm. We can not run water up hill without a force pump. I don't know of a farmer who has'nt terraces that drain into the road, and of course more or less water is emptied into the road ditch.

Let us forget about such things as these and make our roads wide and our ditches sufficient to carry all water that may make its course to them.

Yours for better roads
S. M. EDWARDS

Mr. J. B. Williams, a stalwart citizen of beat 15, was in town Saturday.

Bill Orr is now in Clanton after several months spent in Leeds, Ala. We remember Bill as one of the Star Foot Ball players on the Chilton High.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

If there is any country where tomatoes grow every month in the year we want a job there right now.

Cotton picking has commenced in some portions of the county and in a few days the gins will begin to hum.

It looks like Alabama is going to remain alone in her infamy as the only slave dealing state in the Union.

The cotton mill fever seems to have passed away. Guess we did not want one, or we should have landed it while the landing was easy.

Hiram Johnson is sleuthing president Coolidge now. If he don't land him out of the presidential chair it won't be Hiram's fault.

Schools are opening up this week. If they serve no other purpose, they will be worth the price in giving mother a few hours rest each day.

France has a good stand off for her war debts. She will give you an order on Germany for your money if you want it.

Any guy who attempts to add any more paternal teeth into our school laws has dug his own political grave and covered himself up therein.

What is the excuse for school books going up from 25 to 100 per cent? How many more millionaires have the school patrons of Alabama got to make.

The candidacy of Hon. Oscar Underwood for the presidency will test out the question as to whether or not the Mason and Dixon line has been wiped out

Hon Oscar Underwood has come out strong for the Henry Ford Muscle Shoals combine. Let him have it if he wants it and say no more about it.

William Jennings is a back number now. The humorist and the cartoonist have taken him in hand and that is always the finish of big men when the public gets tired of them.

Railroad men tell us that the negro exodus is reacting already and now the coaches loaded with colored travellers are moving southward instead of to the north.

All of our Big Dogs who have given Europe the once over this summer come back and tell us war is a certainty over there. Next time let 'em fight it out.

We hear of great revival meetings in almost every quarter of the country now. There certainly is plenty of room for improvement in the general moral conditions.

When ever any official begins to use his office either to reward his friends or to punish and annoy the people he does not like, right then it is time for him to be put on the road.

It is absurd to think of an intelligent legislature going backward 20 years and involving the office of County School Superintendent in politics again. Education and religious creeds have no place in a political scramble.

Powergrams, a magazine issued by the employees of the Alabama Power Co., at Birmingham, is a nifty reader. It is high class in every respect and sparkles with the life of happy and contented workers.

The L. & N. railroad has issued a little historical booklet, covering its history from birth until the present time, that is a peach. It is jam full of data that is valuable, which is so splendidly arranged that the whole volumn is absorbingly interesting.

Mr. Underwood seems to be meeting with splendid success, so far, in his campaign. He is a great statesman, but too big a man to be a politician. If the people want a real statesman as president, he is the only one in the field so far—or likely to be—for statesmen are not travelling in bunches these days.

THE NEXT PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

The big gamble is on now and the game being played with all of the skill of master hands at the political table.

Every move is planned with care and foresight as to its effect on the general situation. The chances of each prospective candidate are measured with a nicity and carefulness that is wonderful. And finally the slate is fixed so far as the political gamesters can fix it. Then they are ready to go in the market for the cash.

In playing out this game now, one of the main objects has been to eliminate Henry Ford from the race altogether because he is a reactionary and will not bow down nor wear the yoke of any party or faction. He is in dependent in all things and both parties are fearful of the result if he casts his hat in the ring in the next race.

This being true the idea is to placate him in some way, and induce him to stay out of the race entirely. To do this the impression is growing that the next sitting of Congress will give him Muscle Shoals to play with and keep him out of mischief.

Whether this move would be successful or not is rather a debatable question in our mind. He has said that he did not desire Muscle Shoals at any price, unless he could get the Gorgas Plant thrown in For that very reason we have often wondered whether Mr. Ford was really in earnest in the first place or not in making a bid for Muscle Shoals. He may have already accomplished all he had in mind. He has made a valuable piece of property out of what our republican friends said was only a $17,000,000 pile of junk.

That is a wonderful piece of work within itself and great enough to crown the memory of any man with honor. Besides, he received more high class publicity out of that one proposition than he could have bought with all his wealth.

We almost feel assured that Mr. Ford knew from the very first, that Congress, nor any other human tribunal in this country, could confiscate, in time of peace, the property of one individual and give or sell it to another. The Gorgas plant belonged, in fee simple, to the Alabama Power Co., before the war was ever dreamed of. So nothing short of anarchy could take it forcibly away from them and dispose of it to some one else. Perhaps Mr. Ford had that fact in mind when he inserted the Gorgas clause in his bid and knew, all the time, he was playing the joker on the whole country. Congress included

The republican party have several horses in training now for the grand presidential handicap, President Coolidge is perhaps, the favorite at present, though he is too much like Collin's ram to suit them all.

"Our Oscar" is decidedly the favorite on the democratic side, at present, so far as talk goes. Mr. McAdoo, however, is a close second, with "Whiskey" Al Smith bringing up a backward third.

This is going to be a long and strenuous race and the entries are not closed yet, so no one can give a safe guess as to what two will be in the running at the finish.

THE GOOD ROAD MEETING

Last Saturday a large and interested audience, composed of the citizenship of the county, met at the court house to discuss the project of road working for the future.

We are pleased to say that in no meeting we have ever attended was there manifested a more perfect spirit of good feeling and cooperation than pervaded this assembly.

There were no politics injected into the discussion by a single speaker and the matter was freely discussed in its every angle by a large number of the gentlemen present.

Every person who took part in the informal talks pledged hearty cooperation with the County Commissioners in carrying out the plans formulated for the building of rural roads in every part of the county.

As mentioned last week the county will receive something like $1,400 per month as our share in the gasoline tax. This money cannot be used for any other purpose than for road work, and the concensus of opinion expressed Saturday warmly endorsed the action of the Board of Commissioners in deciding to put this money on the rural roads.

In carrying out of the National and State project for better roads, the B. & M. highway will be ultimately cared for. That system has also decided upon a Selma to Clanton road to couple Selma up with this B. & M. main trunk highway. When these projects are completed Chilton county will have a north and south and an east and west line of good roads, built and maintained by government fund and in the development of these rural roads by the county, the prospect look bright for our county to pull up out of the mud and get on wheels.

It is to be hoped that the spirit of co-operation manifested at the meeting Saturday will continue to exist and that the commissioner's will meet with nothing but help and encouragement in carrying out their program as outlined.

We understand they intend to place a road working unit in every district with proper machinery for carrying the work on successfully and systematicly. This is a wise idea. Every part of the county will begin to reap the benefit right from the start and thus one source of grievance will be obviated

The Chilton County News hopes to see this good work prosper and will cooperate in every way possible to push it along.

The city dads are having a lot of splendid street work done these days. They are building for the future now and the cement bridges and culverts they are putting in will be here as a monument to their good judgement for years to come.

DON'T FORGET YOUR POLL TAX

The crucial period in the Democratic party of Chilton County will be from Oct. 1, 1923 to Feb. 1, 1924. During that four months you all are going to determine the question finally as to whether you expect to win the next election in the county or not

If you lag back and fail to pay your poll tax during that period, no matter how loyal you may be to the party after that time you will have placed yourself in a position where you will be powerless to aid in the most important thing of all and that is voting.

There are plenty of democrats in Chilton county to win every election that comes along if they were qualified voters, why not wake up and [illegible]

The only reason that our county is in the wrong column today is because, the democrats, in the past, abandoned their guns and ceased to fight They became torn by factious, got mad among themselves and began to mete out political punishment among their own ranks.

It requires absolute loyalty and cooperation in any party to win. Internal strife will destroy any kind of an organization with a great deal more certainty than outside opposition. "United we stand, divided we fall" is one of the truest utterances outside of holy writ.

The question for every democrat to decide is "Do I want my party to win." The means [illegible] in your own hands. Make this a personal matter and don't depend on the other fellow. Do your own duty regardless of everything else. Make the trifling sacrifice and help educate your children by doing so and, at the same time, make yourself a full fledged, free American citizen, with as much voice as anybody has in the government of your own country.

Pay your poll tax, see that your name is on the registration books, and then vote your convictions as every 100 per cent American should do.

Will you do it?

CHEAPEST POWER IN THE WORLD

The Corona Coal Company is opening up new mines at Townley, and making extensive improvements on the old ones.

The Alabama Power Company is building a transmission line and will furnish the power for operating these mines.

This in spite of the fact that this coal company owns millions of tons of dirt cheap coal. It goes to show that electricity, generated by water power is the cheapest power in the world.

The Coal Company has viewed the situation from every angle, and figured the cost to a fraction of a cent. And it finds that it can buy power cheaper that it can use what it already has. It is to be transmitted some distance, too, on costly lines. Still its cheaper.

Again we want to call attention to our own beautiful Buttahatchie, in one-half mile of Hamilton, with its swift waters, flowing between steep cliffs, with building stone right on the banks that would build a dam substantial as Gibralter.

Not only could it light all the [illegible] of the county, but it would furnish heat and power sufficient to run all the machinrey of the county.

It will be developed some day. Are we waiting till it is acquired by the foreigner? Why not organize a company right now, and go to work?—Editorial The Marion News Hamilton, Ala.

SEND US YOUR JOB WORK

BUILDING ACTIVITIES

The good weather for the past week has been favorable for construction work and teh several jobs in progress have all shown the effects of it.

Brick work on the Methodist church building si climbing up on the second story now, and is beginning to show up the massive size and durable quality of that splendid structure.

The new Hays building is about completed on the outside and makes a fine addition to the appearance of the down town area. The interior, both up and down stairs, is being pushed to completion.

Work on the new Christian church is also going forward and these good people will soon have them a place of worship that will reflect credit on them and their devotion to things divine.

The fourth avenue bridge across the railroad is gradually assuming form and shape and is going to be a great improvement to Clanton and its traffic troubles.

Mr. O. O. Roper has torn away his old store building just west of the railroad on second avenue and has material on the ground and everything ready for rebuilding, and work will begin heer as soon as Contractor Danforth can get to it.

The numbers other [illegible]

The numerous other jobs in the residential sections seem to be taking advantage of weather conditions also and are being pushed to a finish.

There are several other big down town jobs that are started for early construction and a number of new homes are to go up this fall.

DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF EQUALITY

The outstanding political doctrine of the nineteenth and eighteenth centuries was the doctrine of equality.

The issues involved and discussed so heatedly are as yet unsettled. Russia is conducting and bringing to a close, the modern aspect of the doctrine of equally of all. She has adopted the ideas of some extreme modern thinkers that it is possible to establish completely the financial and economic equality of all citizens of the country. This is contrary to the accepted idea of democracy, that there should be political equality an equality of economic opportunity. Whether it is possible for a government to establish conditions under which every child is born with an equality of environment and without any advantage of inherited wealth is doubtful even as it is doubtful if every child could be born with the same physical health and strength, or with equal mental gifts.

Now comes Stephen Leacock, the college professor and humorist of Canada, who finds a contradiction in the doctrine that men and women should have the same opportunity and the same course of study. He is writing seriously when he discusses what he regards as a mistake by the fem inists in insisting that girls and boys should receive instructions from the same professors and from the same course of study. He says:

"Men and women are different creatures, with different minds and different aptitudes and different paths in life. But the mad passion or 'equality' has masked this obvious fact. When women began to demand quite rightly, a share in higher education, they took for granted that they wanted the same curriculum as the aptitudes did not lie in different directions. In all that goes with the esthetic side of education, with imaginative literature and the cult of beauty, women are, or at least ought to be, the superiors of men. But in all that goes with physical and mathematical science women are far below the standard of men. They are, of course, exceptions. But there is one elephant in the zoo who can count up to ten, too. — Advertiser.

Power to Stop!

Buick Four-wheel Brakes

BUICK four-wheel brakes provide a factor of safety welcomed by every driver. No matter how careful he may be there are moments when the power to stop his car quickly and surely averts a serious accident.

Buick four-wheel brakes operate simply by light pressure on the foot pedal. There is no change in the method of operation over former Buick rear wheel brakes.

Buick rear brake construction has proved its dependability for many years. Identically the same principle, simple in its mechanism and effective in its braking control, now has been employed on the front wheels.

The adoption of four-wheel brakes by Buick on its 1924 cars is wholly in keeping with its policy of giving the owner everything that will increase his safety, comfort and satisfaction.

JEMISON SCHOOL TO OPEN

A few days ago I, while in the office of Mr. J. B. Atkinson, he presented me with thirteen books for the Jemison High School. We thank him for these valuable volumnes for our school. Through the kindness of such friends we have been able to build up a splendid Library. Mr. Atkinson is an attorney of this county who is not here to get all he can out of it, but to put something into it worth while. We know he has a big heart, but I think we have never discovered just how big it is. Those of us who were with him in the Masonic Conference a few days ago saw this thing demonstrated.

Next Monday, September. 3, the Jemi on School opens. All grades will begin work at this time. A splendid [illegible] as follows.

Miss Kate Mc Neill, First Grade.
Miss McMae McNeill, 1st and 2nd.
Mr. Pink Cooper, 5th and7th.
Miss Louise McCollum, Eng., Dom. Science.
Miss Katherine Mickle, Chem. Math
Mr. Summers Manual Arts.

We will have a formal opening at the Baptist church at nine o'clock. We would like for every patron and every one else who is interested in having a good school be present at this time. All fees are due and payable on this day. No students will be enrolled until this has been attended to.

MR. THOMAS PERRY IS DEAD

Last Thursday, morning August 23, our little town was shocked at the message received stating that Tom Perry was dead. Only a few days before he had gone away on his vacation to visit relatives in Aklahoma, when he bid adieu to his friends here, "with a cherry smile and a wave of the hand", they little thought it a final farewell.

Mr. Perry had been in our midst for more than twenty years, having come here from Bibb county. He had been an employee of the T. U. Crumpton Company for eighteen years and had made his home with the Crumpton family.

Mr. Perry was a valuable helper, and a true and tried friend to all. He was a consistent member of the Maplesville Baptist church and was ever ready to lend a helping hand to all who were in need.

A revival service was being held at his church when news of his death reached us. His pastor, Mr. Edwards, asked the congregation to remain standing in silent prayer for two minutes in memory of him.

Many eyes were wet with tears.
"Think of him still, as the same I say,
He is not dead.—he is just away."

FARMERS SHOULD EDUCATE THEIR BOYS

The High School at Isabella opens September the 10th. All patrons and friends of the school are cordially invited to attend the opening. This school is not only for the local community but for all boys in the county who want to study agriculture. In addition to the department of vocational agriculture it has the other regular courses. The purpose of the course in vocational agriculture is to prepare boys to manage their farms with ability, intelligence, and skill. Farming is the most dignified calling of the earth. Our boys and girsl must in some way be kept in the country, instead of going to our already overcomed cities and there drifting into idleness and immorality.

The man who tills the soil in the future must of necessity know scientific agriculture. A knowledge of the science of soil building, soil conservation, home management, marketing etc. will surely bring prosperity and happiness.

This school is open to all boys in Chilton county who have finished the sixth grade. Parents should make a sacrifice if necessary to put their boys and girls in this school. The fees are small, and board can be had cheaply. It is a school in the country for boys and girls. It is our aim to equip them for rural citizenship, for ideal living in the country.

We believe we have a faculty equal to any other in the county in ability scholarship and experience. Mr. Caldwell who is to teach agriculture is thoroughly prepared to give instruction in the fundamentals of successful farming. He is a married man with experience as a teacher of farm demonstrations, and Veterinary Surgeon having taught at Veterinary Surgery in the University of Georgia.

AFTER THE SOUTHERN FARMER

TO THE PRESS OF THE SOUTH:

We are convinced that the vegetable oil schedule is in imminent peril of being docketed for reduction by the Tariff Commission. The linseed oil schedule has already been opened up which endangers the entire vegetable oil structure.

On request of the producers of vegetable oil, animal fats and competitive products, we are requesting the Press of the South to join with the producers in opposing a reduction in their schedule. What is true of vegetable oil is likewise true of all farm schedules.

Governor Walker, of Georgia, Governor McLeod, of South Carlonia and seven Commissioners of Agriculture from Southern States have protested to the President and to the Tariff Commission against re-opening the vegetable oil schedule. We see no good reason for changing any schedule until the present Tariff Act has been given a trial.

There is a concerted movement among the producers which is receiving the support of a large number of bankers to take the Tariff out of politics, as indicatd in the Resolution of the producers among the Chambers of Commerce, the press and civic and industrial bodies.

The Western Producers feel that the situation calls for immediate and vigorous action and have called a Western Tariff Congress to meet at Denver in October. They would be glad to have you join in the call as the Congress will no doubt be recessed and reconvened in the South at an early date and one signature will answer both calls.

Your co-operation will be highly appreciated and your signature to both the enclosed card and resoultion will greatly aid the producers of the nation in their effort to retain present tariff levies.

SOUTHERN TARIFF ASS'N.

PUTTING ALABAMA ON THE MAP

The Alabama Power Company is doing a good deal to sell Alabama's good name to theNorth. It has thrown on the moving screens of the country many good things about Alabama, about its manufacturing enterprises, about the cheapness of electrical energy, about the picking, ginning and manufacturing of cotton which will educate people on this important subject and cause them to keep an eye on Alabama's possibilities.

Only one thing lacking. The fact should be shown on the screen, that an accurate estimate of the South's cotton crop cannot be made in April, as teh government is undertaking to do.—Dothan Eagle.

DANGEROUS AND DESPOTIC

The duty of the State to require the schooling of children, so that they may not grow up unfit to vote a written or printed ballot, is beyond question, but the measure proposed in the Legislature of Alabama that all children shall be compelled to attend the public schools is preposterously wrong.

To deny a parent the privilege of sending a child to a private academy would be for the majority in the State to practice a form of despositism dangerous and despicable.

The bill before the Legislature of Alabama is a copy of a law passed in Oregon. Its existence as a statute in Oregon is evidence of the want of common intelligence rather than of education in that State.

Consistency with this measure would compel the punishment of one teaching private school, and, were that done it would necessarily follow that a parent should be punished for teaching his children.

Compulsory school attendance laws are enacted to prevent parents from depriving children of schooling. The State enters to supply the place of the delinquent father or mother, in order that it may not suffer by the deterioration of its citizenship.

Laws intended to prohibit kinds of teaching have nothing whatsoever to do with compulsory attendance laws. The interest of the State is satisfied when the child is protected from the affliction of illiteracy and ignorance.

The measure offered in the Legislature of Alabama should be entitled, "A bill to render the State of Alabama uninhabitable by parents having common scense and unwilling to live in servitude to bigotry."—Columbia (S. C.) State.

THE BOY SCOUTS

For several months here the Boy Scouts allowed their organization to almost go the way of all the earth, but some few weeks ago, Mr. M. F. Jones interested himself in the work and by good management has injected new life into the local band and they are now one of the vital forces that aid in pushing Clanton and Chilton county to the front.

August 22-25, Mr. Jones had a number of his boys out on a camping trip along the beautiful lake above Lock 12. Fishing, boating swimming and other athletic sports were engaged in and all the boys pronounce the outing one of the greatest ever.

Raymond Roberts is patrol leader for the troup and was in his element while out at the lake. They had in this bunch about 14 of the boys and Mr. J. L. Johnson an ex-teacher and wonderful boy leader.

We are glad to note this revival of interest in the Scout movement here and hope Mr. Jones will stay with the troup and help the boys to keep up a live organization.

SLEEPING ABOVE THE TREE LINE AMIDST SNOW AND ICE IN JULY

I wonder if you ever dream in broad day light: dream when your father thinks you are working hard in the field; dream when your friends are thick around you, but know not that your mind is drifting away from their frolics and finding amusement for itself with no firmer foundation than its own fancy and imagination? If you do not, you will lose part of my story; for mine is now and always has been, a mind more gifted towards day dreaming than towards real hard down thought. At this moment, memory is scanning back over a period of my life when my mind found but little better employment than traveling the world over; seeing its scenes; visiting its cities; scaling its mountain heights; sailing its seas—all this with but little thought that fancy was some what of a wide sweep of things. One of these days, finds me not such a large boy, seated at the noon hour on the very topmost limb of an old mulberry tree, which grew in the outer edge of the yard of my father's farm back in Alabama. Many are the noon hours that have found me perched in the forks of this gnarled old tree; many are the day dreams I have [illegible] [illegible] was then running wild. I have seen myself grow rich many a time without the least effort; I have wandered through well kept gardens in far off lands; beheld with utmost satisfaction galleries filled with the best production of art; and, mind you, without moving in the least from the forks of that old tree.

One of these days found my program a little varied. I had crowded into the pocket of a much fringed pair of over-alls a sheet from a farm story paper. My eyes eagerly ran over line after line under a heading in bold-faced type which stated "Buffalo Bill Kills Two Bears." I recall the story, Buffalo Bill was at the time of the story a young man in the employment of the Scout Service of the United States. His duties had carried him deep into the Ute Indian Nation and into the very heart of a dense forest in the Rocky Mountains. He was making his way along the banks of a mountain stream that came thundering thru a deep dark canyon. Snow lay deep among the fur trees, (although it was mid-summer) and he was cold. Having laid aside his pistols and rifle, with the help of a flint and steel, he began to kindle fire. There was a crash behind him and he turned to find two huge grizzlies between him and his guns. He sprang into the low hanging [illegible] of a fur tree with both bears close behind him. Up and up its slender trunk he went both bears climbing after him. Their snarls were close to his feet and the weight of their ponderous bodies began to sway the tree to and fro. At one instant, he could almost touch the rocks on the side of an immense cliff that towered above him; at the next, he swayed out over a chasm of immeasurable depth below. His only weapon left to him was his bowie knife. With this he cut a limb from the fur tree and soon convinced the foremost bear that there was some danger a-head. Blow after blow on the end of the nose soon sent the second rolling to the ground. Buffalo Bill then made his way cautiously down the tree; and killed both of the bears.

This story of the bears; the slender fur trees in the deep dark can[illegible] you, the [illegible] beaver dams among the snow mountains; the precipice above the scene of the fight and the water falls and chasm below it have always haunted me. There has always been deep down in my soul a yearning; a longing a thirst; to visit the scene of the bear fight; to drink from the ice cold stream that ran out of the snow bank and leaped down into the deep dark canyon among the fur-trees; for a climb up the mountain side; and perhaps, a glimpse of a grizzly that was so bold as to chase the hero of the story to the topmost twig of such a [illegible] [illegible] abyss.

ALABAMA MARINES GETTING EDUCATION

The success of former Alabamans in other sections of the country is always noted with interest by their friends in their native state.

Information has been received at the Marine Recruiting station, City Hall Building, Birmingham, Ala., by Sergeant Linnel F. Hill, who is in charge of the station, that ninety five per cent of the Alabama boys who have enlisted in the Marine Corps during the past six months, are taking advantage of the Marine Corps Institute, offered to all who enlist.

The Marines are not only gaining an education by extensive travel, but [illegible] up with a little time spent each day in some text-book regarding some trade. Said Sergeant Hill, and from the Orient to the stations of the soldiers of the Sea in this country, in fact wherever the mail carries, many students are waiting with eager expectations their percentage markings in order to know how their studies are progressing.

These courses which are free, are open to the enrollment of all members of the Marines, including Reserve and Retired members, as well as their dependents, continued the Sergeant, and the books are so plainly worded, that little time is taken up in a complete understanding of their contents by making application to the Educational Section, Headquarters, Marine Corps, Washington, D. C.

A. C. Pedford, Chairman of the Board of the Standard Oil Company o New Jersey, in an address to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, in a recent convention at Atlantic City, said:

"Governments should lay down the rules which insure fair-play and equal opportunity in the conduct of business, but governments should not attempt to direct the conduct of business itself. The umpires in a baseball game are there to see that the rules are enforced; but they do not attempt to [illegible] or should be the batting order of the team, or whether a team should make four runs or nine in a specific inning; nor do the umpires attempt to tell a losing team what pinch-hitters should be sent to the bat to obtain victory. Is there not a suggestion here which could well be applied to the relationship the Government should assume to business?"

There are now 99 regulatory bodies in the United States who are directing the operation of the railroads. There are 48 State Legislatures, the same number of State Utility Commissions, Congress, the U. S. Railroad Labor Board, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. The railroads are now struggling thru a network of regulations imposed by [illegible] They are not asking to have [illegible] highways, but they are asking that their burdens be not made heavier.

Is not this a reasonable request?

THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

The Federal Water Power Law

The Federal Government has full control over the public lands and other property of the United States. It is likewise lodged with full authority over commerce between the several states; over transportation as a means of such trade; and over power dams and other river improvements which affect navigation as a means of transportation.

The Federal Government could itself make the improvements needed to open our rivers to commerce. It could also authorize the construction of such improvements through other agencies. After years of consideration of the subject, during which Congress repeatedly refused to appropriate the millions of dollars necessary to open the nation's rivers to navigation, Congress passed the Federal Water Power Act, under which development of the rivers of the country by private agencies are licensed, controlled and regulated.

1. Excess profits from the water power must be paid to the United States, whether they are profits of a public utility or a private one.

2. The franchise is limited to 50 years. (Sec. 9) commenced upon acceptance of all the terms and conditions of the act.

(a) The right of the United States or any state or municipality is expressly reserved to take over by condemnation proceedings and maintain and operate the project at any time during the 50 years license period upon payment of just compensation to the licensee therefor.

(b) At the end of the period the right is reserved to the Government to take over the project upon payment of net investment by the licensee, but not to exceed its fair value.

(c) At the end of 50 years, in event the Government does not exercise the right to take over the project, preference is given to application by states or municipalities.

(d) No preference right for renewal of the franchise or any proprietary claim for power is secured to the licensee. If a license is renewed, it must be under the then existing law and regulations.

3. The licensee is required at its own expense, under the supervision of the Power Commission to maintain the project adequate for purposes of navigation, efficient operation in the development and transmission of power, and make necessary renewals and replacements and maintain adequate depreciation reserves.

4. The licensee is required to provide free of cost, power for operation of all navigation facilities (Sec 11c), and authority is reserved in the Government at all times to prescribe regulations governing control of the pool level and other regulations in the interest of navigation.

5. The service rendered its customers and its rates and charges, of payment for all power sold from the project are at all times subject to regulation by duly constituted public authority.

All power sold entering into interstate commerce must be "reasonable, non-discriminatory, and just to the customers, and all unreasonable discrimination and unjust rates or service are hereby prohibited and declared unlawful."

6. After 20 years of operation, amortization reserves are required out of surplus earned thereafter, if any, to be applied, in the discretion of the power commission, in reduction of the net investment of the licensee.

7. The licensee is required to make equitable contribution for benefits accruing to it from headwater improvements either by storage reservoirs or otherwise, whether done by other licensees or by the Government.

8. "Combinations, agreements, arrangements or understandings expressed or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain, direct or to fix, maintain or increase prices for electrical energy or service are prohibited."

9. The right is expressly reserved to the United States to take over the project at any time when the safety of the United States demand.

10. The United States is vested with authority to revoke the license or to remedy or correct by injunction, mandamus, or other process any act of commission or omission in violation of the act or lawful regulation issued thereunder."

The Federal Water Power Act, which established a definite policy of the United States Government for the improvement of rivers for navigation, flood control and power development was evolved after approximately 100 years' consideration of the subject. It embodies all schools of thought—of the advocates of conservation, Pinchot, Roosevelt and others; of those who favor development of water power and those who desire navigation.

In the words of O. C. Merrill, executive secretary of the Federal Power Commission:

"In no other Federal legislation, and in no State legislation, has greater care been exercised to protect every essential public interest. Those who would go further must beware lest the conditions they would impose serve only to increase the cost of the service, or to prevent it altogether."

A TALE of old New Orleans this, in the days when fair ladies were still the cause of duels at sunrise, when young bloods of French and Spanish regime blithely gambled away their last penny at Maspero's.

Mr. Jackson does his bit toward bringing the historical romance back to popularity. His theme is one to inspire a writer, and he leaves nothing to be desired in the rendering of it.

As already proven in his earlier novels, he has steeped himself in not only the history but the atmosphere of those Homeric days when fearless, if often lawless, men were strengthening the life of the young Republic of the West, and the stories of whose deeds have a blood-stirring appeal which time but makes the stronger.

THE FARMER'S NEW POSITION

By WALTER W. HEAD,
First Vice-President American Bankers Association

The farmer today is more than a tiller of the soil. He is a business man. Raising crops is only a part of his business, if he is a real up-to-date Twentieth Century farmer. Problems of marketing, distribution and financing are equally important.

Walter W. Head

The complexity of our modern economic organization makes it necessary for the farmer to understand and assist in solving these problems if he is to succeed. In this new role—as a business man—the farmer steadily has advanced to a better position.

There was a time when the farmer was dependent wholly upon private marketing agencies, whose interest was not always identical with his own, whose greed for profits sometimes outmatched consideration of the farmer's need. Today there are many great co-operative marketing organizations that handle a large part of the farmer's crop and win for him more liberal treatment from the private agencies which still handle the bulk of his production.

Today the farmer also has his own co-operative agencies of credit. If not satisfied with the terms upon which his local capitalist is willing to allow money upon a land mortgage, the farmer can go directly to the Federal Land Bank, which, by reason of tax-exemption and other advantages incidental to its governmental character, can loan money at a rock-bottom rate of interest.

In addition, the federal government has established another group of banks which permit the local bankers —by rediscount privileges—to extend the farmer credit for his current operations on a more favorable basis than ever before. If he thinks his local bank is not sufficiently responsive to his need, this same legislation enables him to join with other farmers in a co-operative marketing association and arrange for credit direct from the government banks.

New Credit Facilities

For years it has been the farmer's complaint—with considerable justification—that he, alone of all producers, has been forced to market his crop on the buyer's terms because of his inability to use his products, in storage, as a basis for credit. Today the agricultural credits act authorizes the acceptance of warehouse receipts, on non-perishable agricultural products, as collateral for loans, the same as in the case of sugar or other commodities of commerce.

These developments have relieved the farmer from what seemed to be persecution by short-sighted, tight-fisted, grasping grain dealers, landlords and bankers—for there were some bankers who were guilty of this very thing, who thought of the farmer principally as a weak and ignorant opponent in a game whose only stake was the collection of a high rate of interest. The farmer's suspicion of the banker arose because of misunderstanding, because he judged bankers as a class by the derelictions of a few. Today, with these sources of government-controlled credit available at his call, the farmer cannot charge or even suspect that the bankers are conspiring to do him harm.

As the real farmer has taken advantage of these opportunities, he has made himself a business man. Like other successful business men, he is equipped with credit to finance his operations, he is able to make use of labor-saving machinery, he is able to barter with buyers of his products as their equal.

Furthermore all pipe dreams are too good to be true. They are not what they seem. The smoke is wearing off in Germany and they are coming down to earth with a dull thud. It is beginning to be realized that the net result of a paper money nightmare is that producers are robbed and speculators enriched. Farmers are unable to raise prices for their products fast enough to keep up with the falling purchasing power of unsound money. The value of such money slips away from them like a handful of dry sand. It brings back to them less in purchases than they gave of their products to get it.

A GENEROUS DEED

A splendid Home and Farm Given As a Token of Gratitude

Nestling at the foot of one of the rugged mountains that make picturesque the north-western corner of Alabama, is a tiny little cabin, planted there like a lone violet, in the vast reaches of that wilderness of granite boulders and towering mountain oaks.

In this pitiful little home resides, with his family, one of God's noblemen, Mr. Arthur Gwathney, who until recent years, was a live hustling pioneer of that wild region. He has a true and faithful wife, one of the type of women who have been made famous in song and story, as the brave heroines who aided so nobly in carving out the destiny of this great land and planting the diadem of a religious civilization upon the brow of a continent given over to wild revels of a heathen race. They also have in this tiny and frugal home seven little children, pledges binding them to earth and making life harder, though sweeter to the parents.

Until a few years ago this father was able to meet life with a smile and by the honest sweat of his brow to keep the wolf from the door, but evil day came and he was ruthlessly stricken down by that dread mountain malady, the rheumatism. Then the real struggle began and the long days and nights of suffering were made more agonizing by the gaunt spectre of want that stalked into the home. Kind friends ministered to them in their distress and even sent the sufferer to the west for his health, but it was not to be and he came back home a broken man and a physical wreck.

Time wore on and the little cabin at the mountain's base was the last resort.

Then one day, in the mysterious working of Providence, our esteemed friend and honored fellow citizen, Mr. W. W. Fox and his sweet-heart wife, came that way in their motor car as they journeyed out their summer vacation, and near this humble little cabin the awful calamity that took the life of Mrs. Fox and forever darkened the pathway and rendered desolate the home of her devoted husband happened.

We all remember the awful circumstances. Both the travelers were caught and pinned down under the burning car and a firery death was staring them in the face. The wife in this lone cabin home happened to look out and see the fatal car as it turned over. She called her crippled husband and while he, axe in hand, hobbled with all possible haste to the aid of the tortured suffers, the, wife, with a wonderful forethought ran out and alarmed the neighborhood and got a party of men there sufficient to move the car and release the dying victims just two minutes before the gas tank exploded and the blistering blaze was scattered on every side.

Now the wonderful skein of life that is woven by Providence and that mysifies us all, changes from these dismal threads of adversity and suffering, and a sheen of bright and glittering beauty comes from the ceaseless loom of life.

Mr. W. W. Fox went back to this harrowing scene last week, and like a voice from dreamland, he made the dream and prayers of this faithful wife and mother come true, by presenting to them a nice little four room bungalow, together with about 100 acres of farm and pasture land, where, when the crops are gathered and the present tenant has vacated, this christian family will move and rest in peace under their own roof with no more fear of landlords and no more fears that an order to move on will ever come again.

This is a romance from real life that no filmed story can ever approach. Mr. Fox, by this deed has erected a monument to the memory of his departed companion that is more noble and lasting than a shaft of the finest marble. This act will live on through the ages and bear fruit as a living testimonial to the eternal brotherhood of man.

This noble act was planned by Mr Fox with his darling wife as she lay on her death bed and knew that only hours measured her span of life. Noble and thoughtful of others even in death this good woman was passed into the realms of eternal bliss, with the sweet insense of this most gracious deed of kindness hallowing her passage inside the pearly gates.

Mr. Fox, who has been a large dealer in real estate for many years says that he feels like this is the best deal he ever made. The boon of seeing the look of gratitude in the eyes of this good couple, and to remember that he has made it possible for those little children to live in a home all their own is a cash payment that can not be estimated in dollars and cents.

NEAR ACCIDENT

On last Sunday afternoon, near Wetumpka, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Cornelius and four children, of Verbena, came near having a serious accident. It seems that in passing another automobile the car in which they were riding was turned over pinning Mr. Cornelius and family under the auto However, they escaped with only slight brusies. This is indeed fortunate for this worthy family.

LABOR DAY

Last Monday was Labor day and in consequence, was a national holliday

This is one of the most popular holidays on the calandar in the industrial centers, and is observed by all classes of people, from the banker on down, or up, as the case may be. Union labor especially gives great prominence to this festive occasion

So far as Clanton was concerned, we noted very little difference from any other day, except the post office force worked shorter hours, the rural route men did not go out and the banks were tight closed all day.

MOVING ALONG

Dr. W. S. Wilson and wife recently of Montevallo, are moving to Clanton this week.

Clanton is glad to welcome all such high class and progressive people a these into her borders. May good success attend them.

AN IMPORTANT LOCAL QUESTION

Month after month has gone into the misty past. Million after million of dollars have been spent of the state and national road fund. Mile after mile of highway have been let, built and under process of construction. Citizens from, perhaps, every county in the state have gone, time and again, before the Roads Commission and asked for roads, and many of them have been successful. Some time the money will give out and we will be sitting back, with our fingers in our mouth, heaping curses on the Commission, but with never a mile of highway built in our county and not a dollar of the money we helped to raise spent on our roads.

Why don't some local organization go to work and lobby us, at least, a shell of the pie while it's going? If we have no organization to do these things then organize one right now.

Unless we stir our pegs and go after something the people who do will certainly gobble it all up

Everytime the Road Commission have a meeting Chilton should have a delegate on hand to root for our section of the B. & M. highway. If we haven't any interest in our county who do we expect to take care of it for us?

Won't some of the live and prominent citizens of the county take this matter up at once before it is everlastingly too late.

Modern road building eats up money mighty fast and before you know it the cash will be out and we will still be in the mud

MISS MABEL WILLIAMS

Last Sunday night the large audience at the Baptist church had the pleasure of listening to an address by Miss Mabel Williams, a student at the great Louisville training school, who has been doing some strenuous home missionary work in the wilds of south west Alabama.

Miss Williams is a home product, having been reared in the western part of Chilton county, and having a large number of prominent relatives living in various sections of the county and state. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Williams and first cousin to Rev. Tov Williams, our local missionary in far off China She is an honor graduate of Newton and Judson colleges and is now taking her graduate course at the Louisvilel, Ky. seminary.

Miss Williams has chosen a very hard career, humanly speaking, but to her, the love of the Master makes her consecrated course look bright and happy. She is destined to make her mark for great good done in the world and have many stars in her crown in eternity.

HOW ABOUT IT?

He says he is willing for his road tax to be doubled if the authorities will work out the ditches on each side of the roads so the buggies and wagons can have a place to travel.

According to him the roads are now so exclusively monopolized by the auto traffic that buggies and wagons have to use the ditches and he wants them made passable.

The meeting was a most successful one from every angle and a lot of enthusiasm was manifested.

The good people of that community ran true to their reputation and fed the large crowd most sumptiously at the noon hour. It is proverbial all over this section if you want the best dinner you ever ate, just go out to Liberty when those good people have planned for a public spread.

CHILTON HIGH SCHOOL

Last Friday evening at 8 o'clock quite a large and representative audience assembled at the auditorium of the High School at the formal opening xercises for the fall term.

Hon. J. B. Atkinson and Prof L. A Callaway both delivered able, interesting and appropriate addresses which were duly enjoyed by the assembled crowd.

Miss Johnson also gave a reading that was greatly enjoyed and her exquisite delivery caught the crowd.

Miss Jewel Minor rendered a beautiful solo that was a credit to her musical talent and splendid voice and contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion

Mr. Charles Moore also did his bit with a well rendered solo that brought down the applause.

In conclusion Prof. Ira Pegues, the new High School principal, delivered a clean cut and concise address, outlining the work ahead and laying down the principles and rules upon which he hoped for the cooperation of the patrons and the ultimate success of the term.

The enrollment at the School is opening up good. Something over 150 are already embarked for the term.

RECIPROCITY DAY

The Civic Improvement Club to Give Reception.

On Tuesday afternoon, Sept 11, in response to the request of the State Federation the local Civic Improvement Club will observe the occasion by giving an afternoon reception at the home of Mrs. J. P. Hayes. Following is the official announcement:

"The Civic Improvement Club will observe "Reciprocity Day," as requested by the State Federation, by tendering a reception to the Faculty of both schools and each organization in Clanton, at the residence of Mrs. J. P. Hays, on Tuesday afternoon, from 4 to 5 o'clock, Sept 11.

The public is cordially invited, and each individual is urged to lend his or her presense to help make of this occasion a happy and inspiring one.

Mrs. HUGH JONES Pres.
Mrs.GRADY BROAHEAD Sec.

A GOOD WORK

We notice this week that a crew of men are at work tearing down some of the old buildings on the block owned by the county, round near the jail, and we have heard that the Commissioner's are going to utilize this material in erecting a garage in which to store the motor cars and trucks of the county when not in use.

This is a good idea and we are glad to see the improvements going on. The county certainly needs a storage place for tools and vehicle.

OUT AGAIN

We are pleased to see Mr. Claude Marcus able to be out again on the streets.

Mr. Marcus is just out of the hospital where he had a very close call occasioned by a faulty appendix. The operation he underwent was an extremely hazardous one and he was on the operating table for more than 2 hours.

He is looking a little under the weather at present but with his usual grit and hustle we expect to see him hitting in high on all six pretty soon.

NEW BUILDING BEGUN

Contractor Danforth and Farley began active operations on the new brick business house to be erected for Mr. O. O. Roper, just west of the railroad on second avenue, Tuesday morning.

This will be a pressed brick and plate glass front and an excellent place of business for some lucky man.

It is possible that Mr. Albert Headley will also erect a two story brick on the corner, joining this new building while the builders are on the job.

We would be glad to see that vacant corner put in to service again.

Messers Sie Maddox, Spurgeon Callaway and Roscoe Connell, left Sunday morning bright and soon by auto to visit friends and relatives in Dallis Texas. They are anticipating a grand trip and will probably remain in Dallas for some two or three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. G .W. Blalock, Mrs. Ralph Brown and two children, of the Magic City, spent several days last week with Mr. Monroe Parrish in beat sixteen and part of the time with our fellow townsman and family, W. J. Armstrong.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

The Federal Water Power Law

The Federal Government has full control over the public lands and other property of the United States. It is likewise lodged with full authority over commerce between the several states; over transportation as a means of such trade; and over power dams and other river improvements which affect navigation as a means of transportation.

The Federal Government could itself make the improvements needed to open our rivers to commerce. It could also authorize the construction of such improvements through other agencies. After years of consideration of the subject, during which Congress repeatedly refused to appropriate the millions of dollars necessary to open the nation's rivers to navigation, Congress passed the Federal Water Power Act, under which development of the rivers of the country by private agencies are licensed, controlled and regulated.

1. Excess profits from the water power must be paid to the United States, whether they are profits of a public utility or a private user.

2. The franchise is limited to 50 years (Sec. 6), conditioned upon acceptance of all the terms and conditions of the act.

(a) The right of the United States or any state or municipality is expressly reserved to take over by condemnation proceedings and maintain and operate the project at any time during the 50 years license period upon payment of just compensation to the licensee therefor.

(b) At the end of the period the right is reserved to the Government to take over the project upon payment of net investment by the licensee, but not to exceed its fair value.

(c) At the end of 50 years, in event the Government does not exercise the right to take over the project, preference is given to application by states or municipalities.

(d) No preference right for renewal of the franchise or any proprietary claim for power is secured to the licensee. If a license is renewed, it must be under the then existing law and regulations.

3. The licensee is required at its own expense, under the supervision of the Power Commission to maintain the project adequate for purposes of navigation, efficient operation in the development and transmission of power, and make necessary renewals and replacements and maintain adequate depreciation reserves.

4. The licensee is required to provide free of cost, power for operation of all navigation facilities (Sec. 11c), and authority is reserved in the Government at all times to prescribe regulations governing control of the pool level and other regulations in the interest of navigation.

5. The service rendered its customers and its rates and charges of payment for all power sold from the project are at all times subject to regulation by duly constituted public authority.

All power sold entering into interstate commerce must be "reasonable, non-discriminatory, and just to the customers, and all unreasonable discrimination and unjust rates or service are hereby prohibited and declared unlawful."

6. After 20 years of operation, amortization reserves are required out of surplus earned thereafter, if any, to be applied, in the discretion of the power commission, in reduction of the net investment of the licensee.

7. The licensee is required to make equitable contribution for benefits accruing to it from headwater improvements either by storage reservoirs or otherwise, whether done by other licensees or by the Government.

8. "Combinations, agreements, arrangements or understandings, expressed or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain, direct or to fix, maintain or increase prices for electrical energy or service are prohibited."

9. The right is expressly reserved to the United States to take over the project at any time when the safety of the United States demands.

10. The United States is vested with authority to revoke the "license or to remedy or correct by injunction, mandamus, or other process any act of commission or omission in violation of the act or lawful regulation issued thereunder."

The Federal Water Power Act, which established a definite policy of the United States Government for the improvement of rivers for navigation, flood control and power development was evolved after approximately 100 years' consideration of the subject. It embodies all schools of thought—of the advocates of conservation, Pinchot, Roosevelt and others; of those who favor development of water power and those who desire navigation.

In the words of O. C. Merrill, executive secretary of the Federal Power Commission:

"In no other Federal legislation, and in no State legislation, has greater care been exercised to protect every essential public interest. Those who would go further must beware lest the conditions they would impose serve only to increase the cost of the service, or to prevent it altogether."

THE FARMER'S NEW POSITION

By WALTER W. HEAD,
First Vice-President American Bankers Association

The farmer today is more than a tiller of the soil. He is a business man. Raising crops is only a part of his business, if he is a real up-to-date Twentieth Century farmer. Problems of marketing, distribution and financing are equally important.

Walter W. Head

The complexity of our modern economic organization makes it necessary for the farmer to understand and assist in solving these problems if he is to succeed. In this new role—as a business man—the farmer steadily has advanced to a better position.

There was a time when the farmer was dependent wholly upon private marketing agencies, whose interest was not always identical with his own, whose greed for profits sometimes outmatched consideration of the farmer's need. Today there are many great co-operative marketing organizations that handle a large part of the farmer's crop and win for him more liberal treatment from the private agencies which still handle the bulk of his production.

Today the farmer also has his own co-operative agencies of credit. If not satisfied with the terms upon which his local capitalist is willing to advance money upon a land mortgage, the farmer can go directly to the Federal Land Bank, which, by reason of tax-exemption and other advantages incidental to its governmental character, can loan money at a rock-bottom rate of interest.

In addition, the federal government has established another group of banks which permit the local bankers—by rediscount privileges—to extend the farmer credit for his current operations on a more favorable basis than ever before. If he thinks his local bank is not sufficiently responsive to his need, this same legislation enables him to join with other farmers in a co-operative marketing association and arrange for credit direct from the government banks.

New Credit Facilities

For years it has been the farmer's complaint—with considerable justification—that he, alone of all producers, has been forced to market his crop on the buyer's terms because of his inability to use his products, in storage, as a basis for credit. Today the agricultural credits act authorizes the acceptance of warehouse receipts, on non-perishable agricultural products, as collateral for loans, the same as in the case of sugar or other commodities of commerce.

These developments have relieved the farmer from what seemed to be persecution by short-sighted, tight-fisted, grasping grain dealers, landlords and bankers—for there were some bankers who were guilty of this very thing, who thought of the farmer principally as a weak and ignorant opponent in a game whose only stake was the collection of a high rate of interest. The farmer's suspicion of the banker arose because of misunderstanding, because he judged bankers as a class by the derelictions of a few. Today, with these sources of government-controlled credit available at his call, the farmer cannot charge or even suspect that the bankers are conspiring to do him harm.

As the real farmer has taken advantage of these opportunities, he has made himself a business man. Like other successful business men, he is equipped with credit to finance his operations, he is able to make use of labor-saving machinery, he is able to barter with buyers of his products as their equal.

Furthermore all pipe dreams are too good to be true. They are not what they seem. The smoke is wearing off in Germany and they are coming down to earth with a dull thud. It is beginning to be realized that the net result of a paper money nightmare is that producers are robbed and speculators enriched. Farmers are unable to raise prices for their products fast enough to keep up with the falling purchasing power of unsound money. The value of such money slips away from them like a handful of dry sand. It brings back to them less in purchases than they gave of their products to get it.

A GENEROUS DEED

Nestling at the foot of one of the rugged mountains that make picturesque the north-western corner of Alabama, is a tiny little cabin, planted there like a lone violet, in the vast reaches of that wilderness of granite boulders and towering mountain oaks.

In this pitiful little home resides, with his family, one of God's noblemen, Mr. Arthur Gwathney, who until recent years, was a live hustling pioneer of that wild region. He has a true and faithful wife, one of the type of women who have been made famous in song and story, as the brave heroines who aided so nobly in carving out the destiny of this great land and planting the diadem of a religious civilization upon the brow of a continent given over to wild revels of a heathen race. They also have in this tiny and frugal home seven little children, pledges binding them to earth and making life harder, though sweeter to the parent.

Until a few years ago this father was able to meet life with a smile and by the honest sweat of his brow to keep the wolf from the door, but evil day came and he was ruthlessly stricken down by that dread mountain malady, the rheumatism. Then the real struggle began and the long days and nights of suffering were made more agonizing by the gaunt spectre of want that stalked into the home. Kind friends ministered to them in their distress and even sent the sufferer to the west for his health, but it was not to be and he came back home a broken man and a physical wreck.

Time wore on and the little cabin at the mountain's base was the last resort.

Then one day, in the mysterious working of Providence, our esteemed friend and honored fellow citizen, Mr. W. W. Fox and his sweet-heart wife, came that way in their motor car as they journeyed out their summer vacation, and near this humble little cabin the awful calamity that took the life of Mrs. Fox and forever darkened the pathway and rendered desolate the home of her devoted husband happened.

We all remember the awful circumstances. Both the travelers were caught and pinned down under the burning car and a firery death was staring them in the face. The wife in this lone cabin home happened to look out and see the fatal car as it turned over. She called her crippled husband and while he, axe in hand, hobbled with all possible haste to the aid of the tortured suffers, the wife, with a wonderful forethought ran out and alarmed the neighborhood and got a party of men there sufficient to move the car and release the dying victims just two minutes before the gas tank exploded and the blistering blaze was scattered on every side.

Now the wonderful skein of life that is woven by Providence and that mystifies us all, changes from these dismal threads of adversity and suffering, and a sheen of bright and glittering beauty comes from the ceaseless loom of life.

Mr. W. W. Fox went back to this harrowing scene last week, and like a fairy from dreamland, he made the dream and prayers of this faithful wife and mother come true, by presenting to them a nice little four room bungalow, together with about 100 acres of farm and pasture land, where, when the crops are gathered and the present tenant has vacated, this christian family will move and rest in peace under their own roof with no more fears of landlords and no more fears that an order to move on will ever come again.

This is a romance from real life that no filmed story can ever approach. Mr. Fox, by this deed has erected a monument to the memory of his departed companion that is more noble and lasting than a shaft of the finest marble. This act will live on through the ages and bear fruit as a living testimonial to the eternal brotherhood of man.

This noble act was planned by Mr. Fox with his darling wife as she lay on her death bed and knew that only hours measured her span of life. Noble and thoughtful of others even in death this good woman was passed into the realms of eternal bliss, with the sweet insense of this most gracious deed of kindness hallowing her passage inside the pearly gates.

Mr. Fox, who has been a large dealer in real estate for many years says, that he feels like this is the best deal he ever made. The boon of seeing the look of gratitude in the eyes of this good couple, and to remember that he has made it possible for those little children to live in a home all their own is a cash payment that can not be estimated in dollars and cents.

NEAR ACCIDENT

On last Sunday afternoon, near Wetumpka, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Cornelius and four children, of Verbena, came near having a serious accident. It seems that in passing another automobile the car in which they were riding was turned over pinning Mr. Cornelius and family under the auto. However, they escaped with only slight brusies. This is indeed fortunate for this worthy family.

LABOR DAY

Last Monday was Labor day and in consequence, was a national holliday

This is one of the most popular holldays on the calandar in the industrial centers, and is observed by all classes of people, from the banker on down, or up, as the case may be. Union labor especially gives great prominence to this festive occasion

So far as Clanton was concerned, we noted very little difference from any other day, except the post office force worked shorter hours, the rural route men did not go out and the banks were tight closed all day.

MOVING ALONG

Dr. W. S. Wilson and wife recently of Montevallo, are moving to Clanton this week.

Dr. Wilson will open dental parlors here and become a real citizen.

Clanton is glad to welcome all such high class and progressive people a these into her borders. May good success attend them.

AN IMPORTANT LOCAL QUESTION

Month after month has gone into the misty past. Million after million of dollars have been spent of the state and national road fund. Mile after mile of highway have been let, built and under process of construction. Citizens from, perhaps, every county in the state have gone, time and again, before the Roads Commission and asked for roads, and many of them have been successful. Some time the money will give out and we will be sitting back, with our fingers in our mouth, heaping curses on the Commission, but with never a mile of highway built in our county and not a dollar of the money we helped to raise spent on our roads.

Why don't some local organization go to work and lobby us, at least, a smell of the pie while it's going? If we have no organization to do these things then organize one right now.

Unless we stir our pegs and go after something the people who do will certainly gobble it all up

Everytime the Road Commission have a meeting Chilton should have a delegate on hand to root for our section of the B. & M. highway. If we have'nt any interest in our county who do we expect to take care of it for us?

Won't some of the live and prominent citizens of the county take this matter up at once before it is everlastingly too late?

Modern road building eats up money mighty fast and before you know it the cash will be out and we will still be in the mud

MISS MABEL WILLIAMS

Last Sunday night the large audience at the Baptist church had the pleasure of listening to an address by Miss Mabel Williams, a student at the great Louisville training school, who has been doing some strenuous home missionary work in the wilds of south west Alabama.

Miss Willliams is a home product, having been reared in the western part of Chilton county, and having a large number of prominent relatives living in various sections of the county and state. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Williams and first cousin to Rev. Toy Williams, our local missionary-in far off China. She is an honor graduate of Newton and Judson colleges and is now taking her ministerial course at the Louisvilel, Ky seminary.

Miss Williams has chosen a very hard career, humanly speaking, but to her, the love of the Master makes her consecrated course look bright and happy. She is destined to make her mark for great good done in the world and have many stars in her crown in eternity.

HOW ABOUT IT?

Mr W N. Burke, who lives out on Route 3, comes to the front with a new road proposition

He says he is willing for his road tax to be doubled if the authorities will work out the ditches on each side of the roads so the buggies and wagons can have a place to travel

Accordine to him the roads are now so exclusively monopolized by the auto traffic that buggies and wagons have to use the ditches and he wants them made passable.

The meeting was a most successful one from every angle and a lot of enthusiasm was manifested

The good people of that community ran true to their reputation and fed the large crowd most sumptiously at the noon hour. It is proverbial all over this section if you want the best dinner you ever ate, just go out to Liberty when those good people have planned for a public spread.

CHILTON HIGH SCHOOL

Last Friday evening at 8 o'clock quite a large and representative audience assembled at the auditorium of the High School at the formal opening xercises for the fall term.

Hon. J. B. Atkinson and Prof L. A Callaway both delivered able, interesting and appropriate addresses which were duly enjoyed by the assembled crowd.

Miss Johnson also gave a reading that was greatly enjoyed and her exquisite delivery caught the crowd.

Miss Jewel Moore rendered a beautiful solo that was a credit to her musical talent and splendid voice and contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion

Mr. Charles Moore also did his bit with a well rendered solo that brought down the applause.

In conclusion Prof. Ira Pegues, the new High School principal, delivered a clean cut and concise address, outlining the work ahead and laying down the principles and rules upon which he hoped for the cooperation of the patrons and the ultimate success of the term.

The enrollment at the School is opening up good. Something over 150 are already embarked for the term.

RECIPROCITY DAY

The Civic Improvement Club to Give Reception.

On Tuesday afternoon, Sept 11, in response to the request of the State Federation the local Civic Improvement Club will observe the occasion by giving an afternoon reception at the home of Mrs. J. P. Hayes. Following is the official announcement:

"The Civic Improvement Club will observe "Reciprocity Day," as requested by the State Federation, by tendering a reception to the Faculty of both schools and each organization in Clanton, at the residence of Mrs. J. P. Hays, on Tuesday afternoon, from 4 to 5 o'clock, Sept 11.

The public is cordially invited, and each individual is urged to lend his or her presense to help make of this occasion a happy and inspiring one.

Mrs. HUGH JONES Pres
Mrs. GRADY BROAHEAD Sec.

A GOOD WORK

We notice this week that a crew of men are at work tearing down some of the old buildings on the block owned by the county and near the jail, and we have heard that the Commissioner's are going to utilize this material in erecting a garage in which to store the motor cars and trucks of the county when not in use.

This is a good idea and we are glad to see the improvements going on. The county certainly needs a storage place for tools and vehicles.

OUT AGAIN

We are pleased to see Mr. Claude Marcus able to be out again on the streets.

Mr. Marcus is just out of the hospital where he had a very close call occasioned by a faulty appendix. The operation he underwent was an extremely hazardous one and he was on the operating table for more than 2 hours.

He is looking a little under the weather at present but with his usual grit and hustle we expect to see him hitting in high on all six pretty soon.

NEW BUILDING BEGUN

Contractor Danforth and Farley began active operations on the new brick business house to be erected for Mr. O. O. Roper, just west of the railroad on second avenue, Tuesday morning.

This will be a pressed brick and plate glass front and an excellent place of business for some lucky man.

It is possible that Mr. Albert Headley will also erect a two story brick on the corner, joining this new building while the builders are on the job.

We would be glad to see that vacant corner put in to service again.

Messers Sie Maddox, Spurgeon, Callaway and Roscoe Connell, left Sunday morning bright and soon by auto to visit friends and relatives in Dallis Texas. They are anticipating a grand trip and will probably remain in Dallas for some two or three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Blalock, Mrs. Ralph Brown and two children, of the Magic City, spent several days last week with Mr. Monroe Parrish in beat sixteen and part of the time with our fellow townsman and family, W. J. Armstrong.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"A—BARATARIA! LAFITTE!"

"I am Lafitte again—not Monsieur Sazarac! Irons, and then the yard-arm for the first fellow who disputes my will. The older heads will not needs be told. The English woman first—after that, as it is Monsieur de Almonaster's honor to his fellow citizens of Louisiana—for Bonaparte. And then—"

"The seas are wide," grimaced Jarvis with a look at the master which drew, in turn, a glance of impenetrable reserve.

This is a stirring tale of the picturesque days when the young Creole bloods of New Orleans rallied around Lafitte—the redoubtable pirate of Barataria Bay who won imperishable fame by coming to the aid of Andrew Jackson when that red-headed warrior beat off the British at New Orleans—and planned the rescue of Napoleon from St. Helena.

"I have been hailed a hero by the city, pardoned and acclaimed for service in the new Republic, denounced again and harried from the seas, to be once more a fugitive!" says Lafitte—and chooses to come back as "Captain Sazarac," only to have his heart stirred by a lovely face—which leads him to the Plot Napoleon.

The author—Charles Tenney Jackson, has achieved a number of decidedly popular and widely read stories. Queerly enough, though he is by birth and education a northerner, he has reproduced so wonderfully the atmosphere of those New Orleans days before the Yankee came to destroy romance—days when fair ladies were still the cause of many a duel and high gambling went with high station.

CHAPTER I

If Jean Were Here.

The affair was one in which, to this point, the young Count de Almonaster had taken the slightest interest. But now the name of his aunt, the Baroness Pontalba, was upon the lips of the portly alderman of Old New Orleans; and when, in turn, Beluche, the swarthy admiral of the Cartagenian privateers, adverted to her, the languid aristocrat shook with laughter.

"Ho, Monsieur Dominque! You, the fat and prosperous counselor of the American quarter who, they say, finds the city's politics even better picking than were your days of piracy with Jean Lafitte—you, you, then, it was, who enticed my good aunt to giving ten thousand of the new Yankee dollars to build the house in which Napoleon is to spend his last days on the rue Chartres! And you—Beluche—for whom, even today, any flag will serve! A grand scheme, this, to rescue Bonaparte from the English! What next for us fantastic Creoles?"

"Monsieur! Not so loud, I beg! An affair of state this, and half the gentry of Louisiana is in it. But the new American governor—eh, bien! At Washington, where the English are now so well received, it might be embarrassing—this plot—"

But De Almonaster shouted the louder. The admiral of Cartagena spluttered; the honest counselor rubbed his velveteened paunch and pleaded for silence. The young man's glance went from the two one-time buccaneers out the door of Maspero's exchange to the shining new plaster and green shutters of the House Napoleon; his hand went to the black silk stock at his neck to check further amusement.

Beluche—short, dark, restlessly glancing about, his black eyes narrowing as if he would be done with talk and to sea again—growled surlily. Admiral of the New Granada rebels he might be, but to his old cronies of the coffee-houses he was still the Barataria gunner who fought the pirates' battery on the right of Jackson's line at Chalmette against the British; and he made as wry a face as any of Lafitte's lieutenants when the grateful young republic of the North pardoned the buccaneers en masse.

But the worthy Alderman Dominique sighed at the younger man's jeers.

"We had thought, Monsieur, that—being of what is conceded to be the proudest family of Louisiana—you would lend generously to the plot—"

"Plot!" Again the Count Raoul mocked as he looked across the cobbles at the fresh paint upon the huge wooden shutters of the House Napoleon; he flung his jeweled fingers airily back to the shadowy tap-room: "Ho, fellow! The rum and limes! Be on with them, but tread softly—we have a plot!"

The two old adventurers gazed at the slender figure in some consternation. "Plot!" De Almonaster made the rafters ring with it: "Threescore carpenters, plasterers and whatnot, slaves and free men of color—labor all summer at this royal domicile; the very fig sellers of the Place d'Armes mewl away about it to sailormen of every sea—I, myself, across the Caribbean, or at Port Royal, am questioned as to what the bravos of New Orleans mean by this madness; and when I come home I am enticed to a public house, and whispered to of a—plot!"

"Eh, bien! It is a plot—" Old Dominique rubbed his nose. "We have the money, the ship, the spirit, the—well, everything."

"Except the emperor! Bonaparte, cooped up on his isle with England watching! Pray, good sirs—who will bell the cat?"

The admiral shrugged and tasted his limed rum of Barbadoes. The young De Almonaster heard two dolorous sighs. It was, indeed, a quiet life and a shameful pass when two worthy buccaneers of but a decade agone sat at their drink to be jibed by an incredulous aristocrat.

"Eh, well—" mumbled old Dominique absently. "If Jean were here he would go rescue Napoleon for these Creoles. Ho, old curthroat, if the Captain Lafitte walked these streets again there would be an end to chatter! Eh, the old days! The good wine and the plunder down the Barataria passes! And I—name of God!—am now the alderman for the American quarter!"

The shadows lengthened across the cobbles to the pretentious House Napoleon. The dim front barroom of La Bourse de Maspero was quite deserted, save for a table of provincial planters from the river parishes here and there. But suddenly the drone of voices from the gaming place in the rear was cut off by a slamming door.

A man had staggered out. Tall, uncouth, of disorderly attire, not at all in the fashion, ragged at the sleeves—he stared at them with swollen eyes set in a drink-flushed face. The empty scabbard of a small sword rattled at his muddy boot-tops; his silken-lined cloak and round velvet cap gave him the aspect of a rather solemn and nervous poseur.

"Devil take the dice!" He saw the elegant De Almonaster, and came briskly nearer: "Back with me, Raoul—watch! An affair, Raoul, that will call me out to the Oaks sleepy-eyed some morning this week. The stranger, Sazarac, has the English colonel bewitched. A Sazarac!—I wish something more than drink could draw all eyes to me! A pistoling fellow, eh bien!"

John Jarvis thrust his blinking eyes nearer: "A rapier bully, Messieurs—

"A Grand Scheme, This, to Rescue Bonaparte From the English! What Next for Us Fantastic Creoles?"

such as this Sazarac . . . there's a woman in it without doubt."

The town's first bohemian of the arts and letters, a graceless scribbler, painter—wastrel of the wine-shops, for all he was the nephew of the great John Wesley in England. He slept, worked and ate in a dirty studio up on the rue Conti, where, unknown as yet to the world, there labored a young assistant who painted backgrounds for Jarvis' portraits, but who was destined for fame when the gamesters and politicians of the New Orleans of 1821 had been long forgotten—Monsieur Audubon, but lately arrived from the Indies.

Jarvis tipped the table for a drink, looking about to see who might pay the score. "Pistols—" he grunted. "I trust this Sazarac wings the Britisher at least, though if he does, I shall see liquor from his veins and not blood. The fellow can drink more than I, which is intolerable. It reflects on my reputation. . . . I shall challenge, myself, if Sazarac does not!"

"They are to fight!" queried De Almonaster languidly.

"They will. I know the course of these affairs. I attend them all, Raoul. I am the black buzzard who is earliest to roost at the Dueling Oaks and wish them bad luck—all."

The first bohemian of the Vieux Carre rubbed his nose: "Another drink, Monsieur? Wait—we shall go in presently when the affair becomes provocative. This Sazarac has a steady eye, and Colonel Carr is bent upon an insult."

"Oh, no!" returned Jarvis airily. "You were discussing the plot. Why sit with Dominique, the alderman, and Beluche, the admiral, save upon our nice intrigue? Ho!" he roared suddenly, so that the glasses quivered. "Be discreet!—our plot Napoleon!"

The two former buccaneers looked wryly at him. "The devil take you, Jarvis," growled Beluche. "It was of old days, and our vanished captain. You, yourself, whom Jean rescued from perdition once—"

"The plot!" shouted Jarvis so loudly that even bystanders across the cobbled way looked into the shadowy portals of Maspero's. "Ah, I am going to my studio, gentlemen! I have an idea! My new assistant is very clever at painting birds—Monsieur Audubon is crazy to paint birds! He sprinkles salt on their tails to catch them. Now I shall take our plot to the studio, and Monsieur Audubon shall paint salt upon it to catch the Emperor Napoleon."

The two worthies glowered upon him. De Almonaster's idle laugh rang out. He, too, arose with Jarvis, and the latter could not resist a last gibe at his cronies. "The alderman and the admiral—and in the one picture that I cared about, done down at Lafitte's red fort before the Americans plundered it, I had the bad taste to paint them in with my captain! What a downfall!—from piracy to politics for Dominique; and old Beluche blustering about having a lawful commission!" He put an unsteady finger on the laughing De Almonaster's sleeve: "Come on, Raoul! There is no more romance since Lafitte abandoned the town to the steamboat Yankees; and yet, last evening, upon the Esplanade, I saw a woman's face, I—Raoul—unshaven, dirty, idle—looked back at her conch. I, Raoul—hanging to a lamp-post—made her smile!"

De Almonaster motioned the jester toward the gaming rooms. "The lady who arrived with the British colonel's party? Of course—I am told she had the gallants astir when she drove."

Jarvis nodded absently: "They are wishing no bad luck to Colonel Carr beyond that this Sazarac shoots him tomorrow at the Oaks. Eh, well—come!"

From the door they could see the throng in La Bourse de Maspero. The wide door of the small room was packed with silent, attentive youths.

Jarvis twitched the coat of the nearest. "What has happened, De Marigny? Is the devil still dicing as to which to take?"

"Carr loses steadily." Young Marigny had but recently attained fame by naming a street of the Faubourg Marigny—his patrimony now being cut into lots and sold to the insatiable Americans outside the city walls—"Rue de Bagatelle," to commemorate his losses at the game. He therefore parted the skirts of his bottle-green coat, thrust his hands upon his breeches of snow-white leather and tapped them significantly: "A ruined man. Eh, bien! The British consul, Langhorne, protested, seemingly very uncomfortable at Colonel Carr's insistence at play with this Captain Sazarac, who, it is said, is a mere professional gambler of the river packets with the manners of a gentleman. I will say he has acted so—he tried in every way to avoid Carr's game, but it appears that the British officer involved himself badly on the way from St. Louis."

"How then?" ventured De Almonaster. "A professional gamester at Maspero's?"

"Carr, himself, introduced the fellow; the game must continue," young De Marigny shrugged; "and there is talk of some affair of women between the two!"

"The lady who looked back from her conch—" mused Jarvis to himself. "I must get me a new waistcoat."

A massive silver candelabrum cast a ruby light upon the cloth about which sat a quartette. Langhorne, His Majesty's consul; a dealer of Maspero's; Colonel Carr of the newly arrived British mission en route to the Mexicoes; and the stranger from the West.

"Sazarac—" muttered De Marigny, "whose fame at the cards has overleaped the town in one night. Mark him, Raoul!—a peruke, whitened as silver! Where has the fellow been these years as to know not the fashions?"

Argentina.

Argentina, or the Argentine Republic, has an area of 1,135,840 square miles and a population of about 7,500,000. The resources include forests of hardwood in the north, pine forests in the Andes region; coal is found; but the chief sources of wealth are agriculture and the pastures. Large numbers of sheep and cattle are raised; dairying is important, and the chief crops are wheat, linseed, oats, barley, rye, and Indian corn. In some parts sugar cane and fruits are cultivated.

Sneeze First.

Gen. Amos Fries, chief of the chemical warfare service of our army, suggests the introduction of a small quantity of a new "sneeze gas" into illuminating gas, with a view to preventing suicides. Assuredly the man contemplating self-destruction will find it extremely disconcerting to have to pause in the midst of the solemn process for so ridiculous a gesture as that of sternutation. Empedocles of Etna, or Sophocles with his draught of hemlock, or Cleopatra with her asp could not have departed this life with dignity in the middle of a sneeze. If one stops long enough for that, there is a chance of a sober second thought.

About one suicide in seven in this country is with gas. The fact shows the importance of even so slight an obstacle of a sneeze. A fraction of a second may be enough to upset a foolish determination. If he who hesitates is lost, he also may be saved when the pause means an instantaneous review of the causes leading up to the precipitate deed. It does not take long in such instances to decide that one is in error, and to recant.

Famous Lights.

The bright lights. The parlor lamp. Lights out. Eating light. Light in the head. The light that failed. Turn on the lights.

An Awful Singer.

The neighbor upstairs was a student in music, and practiced for a few hours daily. Hearing this daily became rather tiresome, and at times was irritating. One day, while my husband was home for the day, she started her practice, and, not feeling any too well that day, I happened to say to my husband that it was awful to have to listen to that noise each day. This remark was overheard by my five-year-old daughter.

A week or so later this same neighbor invited a group of women for a game of bridge, after which she played and sang for us. My daughter did not applaud, and she asked her if she didn't like it. "Oh, yes, I like it all right," she said, "but mother says your singing is awful!"—Exchange.

The Book of Job.

Although she did not study the Bible closely she had heard about Job and his mysticism and was interested.

"I thought all the time that the story of Job was in the Bible but I hunted all through it one we had and I couldn't find it," she told a friend, and then she added: "But I know some one who has a real old Bible, and I'm going to get it and see if it doesn't have the story in it!"

AROUND THE WORLD

LEGISLATIVE NEWS IN BRIEF

A Weekly Review of the More Important Activities of the Alabama Legislature.

By CLIVER S. MORTON, JR.

Governor Brandon exploded a bomb in the halls of the Legislature Friday, August 31st, when he called the two houses into joint session and told them that the state was facing an annual deficit of around $1,066,710.95 unless the four mill tax measure is passed and the constitutional amendment making it a law is ratified.

The governor stated that the deficit would exist even if the state pursued its ordinary program of appropriations. The message was delivered in connection with the report of the state budget commission which showed the condition of the state's finances.

Because of the state's financial condition, the governor said the budget commission had established and he, as governor, had sanctioned the policy of declining to approve any increases in appropriations whatever, except with the contingency that the four mill tax for education be ratified by the voters.

This program of retrenchment will cut down the appropriations for agricultural activities, for the enforcement of the conservation statutes, for the expansion of the child welfare program, and for the construction of a state sanitarium for tubercular patients.

Governor Brandon showed that the total estimated receipts of the general fund for 1923-24 are $9,153,550 while the estimated expenditures based on present appropriations will be $9,260,360.95. This will leave an annual deficit in the general fund of $106,810.95. In addition to this deficit in the general fund, there are contingent appropriations, of which at least a portion must be met, to the amount of $274,400. Added to this the message estimated that the state's total indebtedness September 30th, as shown by the budget commission's report will be $2,750,000 and that if this deficit is divided into four years covering the Brandon administration, the annual total deficit will be $1,066,710.95.

The governor stated that he greatly regretted that the condition shown would prevent him from making recommendations for any increases in appropriations. He said the submission of the four mill tax and its ratification by the voters will remove all difficulties.

All during the eighth legislative week, up to the very moment the governor brought his message to the houses, appropriation bill after bill had been introduced on the floor of both House and Senate. Many of the measures brought sought increased appropriations for new purposes. The effect the governor's message will have on the disposition of these bills remains to be seen in the actions of the Legislature during the few more days allotted for its labors.

The Sunday observance bill proved a false alarm in the house when the members waited expectantly on Friday, August 31, for Representative Bealle of Tuscaloosa to make an effort to bring it back up in the house. Several of the members were awaiting to oppose the Bealle action and when he advanced at the time of introduction of new bills with a measure, they prepared for oratorical action. The Tuscaloosan, however, sprang a surprise by introducing a resolution for the registration of nurses in the state.

A bill to exempt veterans of the World War from paying state poll tax for all time was passed by the House Wednesday, August 29th, by a vote of 79 to 0. The bill proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state to be voted on by the people, which, if passed, will grant the exemption to all persons who served honorably in the United States army or navy from January 1st, 1917 to November 11th, 1918. Representative Holcombe, of Mobile, sponsored the bill.

A bill by Senator Teasley makes it a misdemeanor for a person to ride on trains without a ticket. The measure makes hoboing or attempts to evade paying fares punishable by a fine of from $100 to $1,000.

A favorable vote was given by the senate educational committee to a bill by Senator J. M. Foster of Tuscaloosa providing for children having their education retarded for a period of three years. The bill provided for mental clinics and special teachers for every ten children.

To provide an Alabama monument at the scene of the battle of Gettysburg is the purpose of a bill given favorable report in the House Friday, August 31st

HOUSE PASSES AUTOMOBILE SECTION OF REVENUE BILL

Bill As Passed Does Not Effect Pleasure Cars—Tax Is On Heavy Cars and Trucks.

Two outstanding events of the eighth legislative week were the passage by the House of the automobile section of the general revenue bill and the treatment the 'ag" code received at the hands of the House committee on agriculture. In the first case harmony existed, but in the second instance discord prevailed.

By a vote of 70 to 9, the House Wednesday afternoon, August 29 voted to pass the auto license section of the revenue bill. While the measure, as passed, does not affect the pleasure cars, it does levy heavy license tax on the heavier auto trucks and hearses as well as ambulances. License is also provided for all auto trailers.

Some fight was encountered on the measure when the point of ad valorem taxation on automobiles was reached. The clash came over a section which read "that on and after the first day of October, 1924, no license shall be issued to operate a motor vehicle on the highways of this state until the advalorem tax on such vehicle shall have been satisfied, evidenced by a receipt from the tax collector of the county. . . . On and after the first day of October, 1924, every person, firm, or corporation who desires to operate a motor vehicle on the public highways of this state shall first return such motor vehicle for ad valorem taxation to the county tax assessor. . . . Upon payment of taxes due on any motor vehicle the tax collector shall issue a motor vehicle receipt on a form prescribed by the state tax commission and such receipt shall be the authority for the probate judge to issue a license."

The terms of the measure are regarded by those who opposed it as requiring the automobile owner to pay ad valorem taxes on his auto, whether new or second hand, before he can take it from the dealer, as he cannot drive the automobile away without a

The proposed state "ag" code was emasculated by the House committee on agriculture Thursday, August 30th. The committee adopted the code favorably after they had torn it to shreds. The bill, as amended by the committee, provided that five of the seven proposed members of the state agricultural board shall be farmers. The director of the extension service was left entirely off the board. The state-wide stock law proposed in the bill was eliminated. A section providing that milk used in the manufacture of ice cream shall be pasteurized was stricken. Numerous smaller changes were made in the document.

The bill as proposed would create a board of agriculture with three farmers and four state officials. The officials were to be the state commissioner of agriculture, the director of extension service, dean of the veterinary school at Auburn, and the dean of the Auburn agricultural school. As amended five of the members must be dirt farmers. This tampering with the bill came as a distinct shock to those who had drawn its features.

The tax exemptionists never cease to lay their plans to exempt first one industry and then another. During a strenuous session Wednesday, August 29th, the Senate ran true to the policy shown by the present Legislature and lambasted a measure presented by Senator John Overton asking that tax exemptions be granted cotton mills and other manufactures during the construction era. There was a 16-16 tie when the bill was voted and it took the vote of Lieutenant-Governor McDowell to swing the bill off the floor into the discard heap.

Hardly had this measure been thrust out of the way before Senator Powell, of Tuskegee, introduced another exemption bill into the Senate calling for an exemption from taxation for cotton mills for a period of five years. The bill in many respects is similar to that of the defeated Overton measure.

The bill of Senator John Craft of Mobile to provide for the regulation of short loan making companies, charging high rates of interest was chloroformed by the senate committee on banking and insurance. The committee vote stood four to three against the bill.

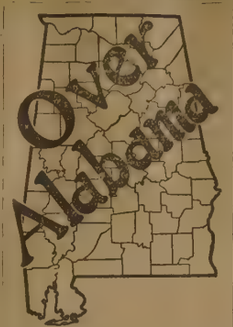
A severance tax in Alabama, to be applied on all natural resources commercialized in the state would be made by a bill introduced in both houses of the legislature. Senator George W. Duncan of Limestone introduced the bill in the senate and Rep. Will O. Walton of Chambers in the house.

The tax would be levied at three percent on all products taken from the waters, the soil and the forests of the state.

The signing by Governor Brandon of the bill consolidating Albany and Decatur made the two towns one. The population of the new city is approximately 12,000.

Representative Letson, of Marion, has a bill to equalize the terms of all Alabama schools and to provide funds so apportioned. Mr. Letson says his bill is to prohibit the long terms of the white schools of the black belt at the expense of the public schools of the white sections.

By a vote of 18 to 10 the Senate has squashed the desire of Greater Alabama, Inc., for a nation-wide advertising campaign of Alabama's natural resources. The measure was indefinitely postponed.



ALABAMA NEWS HAPPENINGS.

A Resume of the More Important Events of Interest Condensed To An Epitomized Form.

An incident occured in Grensboro last week that accentuates anew the friendly feeling between the negro and white. Two old negro women willed their property to their white friends as an expression of their gratitude for kindness and good treatment during their association of some 30 years. One old woman was bedridden and entirely helpless with rheumatism, but she received the kindest care from her white employers, for whom she had worked so long. Her way of returning thanks was to will her small property to them. This they did not keep, but after paying for her funeral, they turned the remainder over to relatives. The other, who was accidently killed, was found to have willed her house and lot to the people for whom she had washed for 20 years continuously.

DAIRY FACTS

New World's Record for Butterfat Production

A new world's record for production of butterfat in one year over all breeds has been established by a Holstein cow owned by Raymondale farm at Vaudreuil, Quebec. DeKol Plus Segis Dixie freshening at the age of nine years and three months, and weighing 1,650 pounds, produced 33,464.7 pounds of milk containing 1,349.35 pounds of butterfat in 365 consecutive days. This amount of butterfat is equal to 1,686.69 pounds of butter. This production surpasses the former world record held by another Canadian Holstein cow by 5 pounds of butter.

Because of her previous high records of production, "Dixie" was placed on strictly official test, supervised by both the Holstein-Friesian Association of America and the Dominion department of agriculture of Canada, which supervises record of performance tests for all breeds of dairy cattle in Canada.

The new champion was fed a grain ration consisting of equal parts of bran, homing, dried distillers' grains, gluten meal, oil cake and cracked oats. To 100 pounds of this mixture was added one pound of salt, one pound of charcoal and one-fourth-pound of bonemeal. She was fed at the rate of one pound of grain mixture to each four pounds of milk produced. Her roughage consisted mainly of mixed hay and some corn silage and beets. All of last summer she was let out to pasture two hours a day.

Production of Fat Is Affected by Age of Cow

Fat production by the average dairy cow increases till she has passed her seventh year, reaches its peak before the end of her eighth year and then gradually declines. This fundamental truth in farming science was discovered recently by C. W. Turner, a teacher in the dairy department of the Missouri College of Agriculture.

This conclusion was reached only after Turner had worked out the relation between the age and the yearly fat production of more than 46,000 dairy cows. The data included all the yearly fat records available of pure bred dairy cows in the United States. This is the first time an intensive compilation of this sort has been carried out.

The value of this information lies in knowing what production may be expected of a cow at a certain age. For example, if a farmer knows the present production of a two-year-old cow and wishes to estimate what she will be worth to him in five years, he will have an authoritative table which he may consult.

A yearling produces 64.6 per cent compared to a cow at maturity; a two-year-old, 78.6 per cent; a three-year-old, 84 per cent; a four-year-old, 90 per cent; a five-year-old, 95 per cent, and a six-year-old, 99 per cent. After seven years the decline in production is gradual.

Of the total number of records examined, 13,723 were Jersey cows; 13,590 Guernseys; 12,504 Holsteins; 5,162 Ayrshires, and 1,014 Milking Shorthorns.

Increase of Butterfat Is Not Made by Feeding

According to experimental work that has been done, the percentage of fat in milk cannot be increased by feeding. The milk of each individual cow seems to have a fixed composition that is natural to her. True, the richness of the milk may be increased or decreased for a short time if the cow's digestive system is disturbed by sickness or improper feeding, but will return to the normal test in a short time. The quantity of milk may easily vary with feeding, consequently the total pounds of butterfat would be increased without a variation in the test. By having a cow in high flesh at the time of freshening, the test may be raised for a time, the supposition being that the body fat is drawn upon, but it only lasts for a short time, when the test returns to the point peculiar to the individual.

Pointers for Selection of Improved Dairy Cow

One or two signs tell a good cow. In a poor cow the thigh runs down straight, so there is no place between the thigh and the udder on one side and the tail on the other. There should be plenty of daylight between the udder and the tail. One of the best ways to tell what kind of a cow you have is by her temperament. A good dairy type has a sharp spine, and sharp hip bones. A good cow has a large wedge-shaped stomach.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"A—BARATARIA! LAFITTE!"

"I am Lafitte again—not Monsieur Sazarac! Irons, and then the yard-arm for the first fellow who disputes my will. The older heads will not needs be told. The English were the first—after that, as it is Monsieur de Almonaster's honor to his fellow citizens of Louisiana—for Bonaparte. And then—"

"The seas are wide," grimaced Jarvis with a look at the master which drew, in turn, a glance of impenetrable reserve.

This is a stirring tale of the picturesque days when the young Creole bloods of New Orleans rallied around Lafitte—the redoubtable pirate of Barataria Bay who won imperishable fame by coming to the aid of Andrew Jackson when that red-headed warrior beat off the British at New Orleans—and planned the rescue of Napoleon from St. Helena.

"I have been hailed a hero by the city, pardoned and acclaimed for service in the new Republic, denounced again and harried from the seas, to be once more a fugitive!" says Lafitte—and chooses to come back as "Captain Sazarac," only to have his heart stirred by a lovely face—which leads him to the Plot Napoleon.

The author—Charles Tenney Jackson, has achieved a number of deservedly popular and widread novels. Queerly enough, though he is by birth and education a northerner, he has reproduced marvelously the atmosphere of those New Orleans days before the Yankee came to destroy romance—days when fair ladies were still the cause of many a duel and high gambling went with high stakes.

If Jean Were Here.

The affair was one in which, to this point, the young Count de Almonaster had taken the slightest interest. But now the name of his aunt, the Baroness Pontalba, was upon the lips of the portly alderman of Old New Orleans; and when, in turn, Beluche, the swarthy admiral of the Cartagenian privateers, adverted to her, the languid aristocrat shook with laughter.

"Ho, Monsieur Dominique! You, the fat and prosperous counselor of the American quarter! Who, they say, finds the city's politics even better picking than were your days of piracy with Jean Lafitte—you, you, then, it was, who enticed my good aunt to giving ten thousand of the new Yankee dollars to build the house in which Napoleon is to spend his last days on the rue Chartres! And you—Beluche—for whom, even today, any flag will serve! A grand scheme, this, to rescue Bonaparte from the English! What next for us fantastic Creoles?"

"Monsieur! Not so loud, I beg! An affair of state, this, and half the gentry of Louisiana is in it. But the new American governor—eh, bien! At Washington, where the English are now so well received, it might be embarrassing—this plot—"

But De Almonaster shouted the louder. The admiral of Cartagena spluttered; the honest councilor rubbed his velvet-clad paunch and pleaded for silence. The young man's glance went from the two one-time buccaneers out the door of Maspero's exchange to the shining new plaster and green shutters of the House Napoleon; his hand went to the black silk stock at his neck to check further amusement.

Beluche—short, dark, restlessly glancing about, his black eyes narrowing as if he would be done with talk and to sea again—growled surlily. Admiral of the New Grenada rebels he might be, but to his old cronies of the coffee-houses he was still the Barataria gunner who fought the pirates' battery on the right of Jackson's line at Chalmette against the British; and he made as wry a face as any of Lafitte's lieutenants when the grateful young republic of the North pardoned the buccaneers en masse.

But the worthy Alderman Dominique sighed at the younger man's scorn.

"We had thought, Monsieur, that—being of what is conceded to be the proudest family of Louisiana—you would lend generously to the plot—"

"Plot!" Again the Count Raoul mocked as he looked across the cobbles at the fresh paint upon the huge wooden shutters of the House Napoleon; he flung his jeweled fingers airily back to the shadowy tap-room: "Ho, fellow! The rum and limes! Be on with them, but tread softly—we have a plot!"

The two old adventurers gazed at the slender figure in some consternation. "Plot!" De Almonaster made the rafters ring with it: "Threescore carpenters, plasterers and whatnot, slaves and free men of color—labor all summer at this royal domicile; the very fig sellers of the Place d'Armes mewl away about it to sailormen of every sea—I, myself, across the Caribbean, or at Port Royal, am questioned as to what the bravos of New Orleans mean by this madness; and when I come home I am enticed to a public house, and whispered to of a—plot!"

"Eh, bien! It is a plot—" Old Dominique rubbed his nose. "We have the money, the ship, the spirit, the—well, everything."

The admiral shrugged and tasted his limed rum of Barbadoes. The young De Almonaster heard two dolorous sighs. It was, indeed, a quiet life and a shameful pass when two worthy buccaneers of but a decade agone sat at their drink to be jibed by an incredulous aristocrat.

"Eh, well—" mumbled old Dominique absently. "If Jean were here he would go rescue Napoleon for these Creoles. Ho, old cutthroat, if the Captain Lafitte walked these streets again there would be an end to chatter! Eh, the old days! The good wine and the plunder down the Barataria passes! And I—name of God!—am now the alderman for the American quarter!"

The shadows lengthened across the cobbles to the pretentious House Napoleon. The dim front barroom of La Bourse de Maspero was quite deserted, save for a table of provincial planters from the river parishes here and there. But suadenly the drone of voices from the gaming place in the rear was cut off by a slamming door.

A man had staggered out. Tall, uncouth, of disorderly attire, not at all in the fashion, ragged at the sleeves—he stared at them with swollen eyes set in a drink-flushed face. The empty scabbard of a small sword rattled at his muddy boot-tops; his silken-lined cloak and round velvet cap gave him the aspect of a rather solemn and nervous poseur.

"Devil take the dice!" He saw the elegant De Almonaster, and came briskly nearer: "Back with me, Raoul—watch! An affair, Raoul, that will call me out to the Oaks sleepy-eyed some morning this week. The stranger, Sazarac, has the English colonel bewitched. A Sazarac!—I wish something more than drink could draw all eyes to me! A pistoling fellow, eh bien!"

John Jarvis thrust his blinking eyes nearer: "A rapier bully, Messieurs—

such as this Sazarac . . . there's a woman in it without doubt."

The town's first bohemian of the arts and letters, a graceless scribbler, painter—wastrel of the wine-shops, for all he was the nephew of the great John Wesley in England. He slept, worked and ate in a dirty studio up on the rue Conti, where, unknown as yet to the world, there labored a young assistant who painted backgrounds for Jarvis' portraits, but who was destined for fame when the gamesters and politicians of the New Orleans of 1821 had been long forgotten—Monsieur Audubon, but lately arrived from the Indies.

Jarvis tipped the table for a drink, looking about to see who might pay the score. "Pistols—" he grunted. "I trust this Sazarac wings the Britisher at least, though if he does, I shall see liquor from his veins and not blood. The fellow can drink more than I, which is intolerable. It reflects on my reputation. . . . I shall challenge, myself, if Sazarac does not!"

"They are to fight?" queried De Almonaster languidly.

"They will. I know the course of these affairs. I attend them all, Raoul. I am the black buzzard who is earliest to roost at the Dueling Oaks and wish them bad luck—all."

The first bohemian of the Vieux Carre rubbed his nose: "Another drink, Monsieur? Wait—we shall go in presently when the affair becomes provocative. This Sazarac has a steady eye, and Colonel Carr is bent upon an insult."

"Oh, no!" returned Jarvis airily. "You were discussing the plot. Why sit with Dominique, the alderman, and Beluche, the admiral, save upon our nice intrigue? Ho!" he roared suddenly, so that the glasses quivered: "Be discreet!—our plot Napoleon!"

The two former buccaneers looked wryly at him. "The devil take you, Jarvis," growled Beluche. "It was of old days, and our vanished captain. You, yourself, whom Jean rescued from perdition once—"

"The plot!" shouted Jarvis so loudly that even bystanders across the cobbled way looked into the shadowy portals of Maspero's. "Ah, I am going to my studio, gentlemen! I have an idea! My new assistant is very clever at painting birds—Monsieur Audubon is crazy to paint birds! He sprinkles salt on their tails to catch them. Now I shall take our plot to the studio, and Monsieur Audubon shall paint salt upon it to catch the Emperor Napoleon."

The two worthies glowered upon him. De Almonaster's idle laugh rang out. He, too, arose with Jarvis, and the latter could not resist a last gibe at his cronies. "The alderman and the admiral—and in the one picture that I cared about, done down at Lafitte's red fort before the Americans plundered it, I had the bad taste to paint them in with my captain! What a downfall!—from piracy to politics for Dominique; and old Beluche blustering about having a lawful commission." He put an unsteady finger on the laughing De Almonaster's sleeve: "Come on, Raoul! There is no more romance since Lafitte abandoned the town to the steamboat Yankees: and yet, last evening, upon the Esplanade, I saw a woman's face. I—Raoul—unshaven, dirty, idle—looked back at her coach. I, Raoul—hanging to a lamppost—made her smile!"

De Almonaster motioned the jester toward the gaming rooms. "The lady who arrived with the British colonel's party? Of course—I am told she had the gallants astir when she drove."

Jarvis nodded absently: "They are wishing no bad luck to Colonel Carr beyond that this Sazarac shoots him tomorrow at the Oaks. Eh, well—come!"

From the door they could see the throng in La Bourse de Maspero. The wide door of the small room was packed with silent, attentive youths.

Jarvis twitched the coat of the nearest. "What has happened, De Marigny? Is the devil still dicing as to which to take?"

"Carr loses steadily." Young Marigny had but recently attained fame by naming a street of the Faubourg Marigny—his patrimony now being cut into lots and sold to the insatiable Americans outside the city walls—"Rue de Bagatelle," to commemorate his losses at the game. He therefore parted the skirts of his bottle-green coat, thrust his hands upon his breeches of snow-white leather and tapped them significantly: "A ruined man. Eh, bien! The British consul, Langhorne, protested, seemingly very uncomfortable at Colonel Carr's insistence at play with this Captain Sazarac, who, it is said, is a mere professional gambler of the river packets with the manners of a gentleman. I will say he has acted so—he tried in every way to avoid Carr's game, but it appears that the British officer involved himself badly on the way from St. Louis."

"How then?" ventured De Almonaster. "A professional gamester at Maspero's?"

"Carr, himself, introduced the fellow; the game must continue," young De Marigny shrugged; "and there is talk of some affair of women between the two!"

"The lady who looked back from her coach—" mused Jarvis to himself. "I must get me a new waistcoat."

A massive silver candelabrum cast a ruby light upon the cloth about which sat a quartette. Langhorne, His Majesty's consul; a dealer of Maspero's; Colonel Carr of the newly arrived British mission en route to the Mexicoes; and the stranger from the West.

"Sazarac—" muttered De Marigny, "whose fame at the cards has overleaped the town in one night. Mark him, Raoul!—a peruke, whitened as silver! Where has the fellow been these years as to know not the fashions?"

Argentina.

Argentina, or the Argentine Republic, has an area of 1,135,840 square miles and a population of about 7,500,000. The resources include forests of hardwood in the north, pine forests in the Andes region; coal is found; but the chief sources of wealth are agriculture and the pastures. Large numbers of sheep and cattle are raised; dairying is important, and the chief crops are wheat, linseed, oats, barley, rye, and Indian corn. In some parts sugar cane and fruits are cultivated.

Sneeze First.

Gen. Amos Fries, chief of the chemical warfare service of our army, suggests the introduction of a small quantity of a new "sneeze gas" into illuminating gas, with a view to preventing suicides. Assuredly the man contemplating self-destruction will find it extremely disconcerting to have to pause in the midst of the solemn process for so ridiculous a gesture as that of sternutation. Empedocles of Etna, or Sophocles with his draught of hemlock, or Cleopatra with her asp could not have departed this life with dignity in the middle of a sneeze. If one stops long enough for that, there is a chance of a sober second thought.

About one suicide in seven in this country is with gas. The fact shows the importance of even so slight an obstacle of a sneeze. A fraction of a second may be enough to upset a foolish determination. If he who hesitates is lost, he also may be saved when the pause means an instantaneous review of the causes leading up to the precipitate deed. It does not take long in such instances to decide that one is in error, and to recant.

An Awful Singer.

The neighbor upstairs was a student in music, and practiced for a few hours daily. Hearing this daily became rather tiresome, and at times was irritating. One day, while my husband was home for the day, she started her practice, and, not feeling any too well that day, I happened to say to my husband that it was awful to have to listen to that noise each day. This remark was overheard by my five-year-old daughter.

A week or so later this same neighbor invited a group of women for a game of bridge, after which she played and sang for us. My daughter did not applaud, and she asked her if she didn't like it. "Oh, yes, I like it all right," she said, "but mother says your singing is awful!"—Exchange.

The Book of Job.

Although he did not study the Bible closely she had heard about Job and his mysticism and was interested.

"I thought all the time that the story of Job was in the Bible but I hunted all through the one we had and I couldn't find it," she told a friend, and then she added: "But I know some one who has a real old Bible, and I'm going to get it and see if it doesn't have the story in it!"

LEGISLATIVE NEWS IN BRIEF

A Weekly Review of the More Important Activities of the Alabama Legislature.

By OLIVER S. MORTON, JR.

Governor Brandon exploded a bomb in the halls of the Legislature Friday, August 31st, when he called the two houses into joint session and told them that the state was facing an annual deficit of around $1,066,710.95 unless the four mill tax measure is passed and the constitutional amendment making it a law is ratified.

The governor stated that the deficit would exist even if the state pursued its ordinary program of appropriations. The message was delivered in connection with the report of the state budget commission which showed the condition of the state's finances.

Because of the state's financial condition, the governor said the budget commission had established and he, as governor, had sanctioned the policy of declining to approve any increases in appropriations whatever, except with the contingency that the four mill tax for education be ratified by the voters.

This program of retrenchment will cut down the appropriations for agricultural activities, for the enforcement of the conservation statutes, for the expansion of the child welfare program, and for the construction of a state sanitarium for tubercular patients.

Governor Brandon showed that the total estimated receipts of the general fund for 1923-24 are $8,153,550 while the estimated expenditures based on present appropriations will be $9,260,360.95. This will leave an annual deficit in the general fund of $106,810.95. In addition to this deficit in the general fund, there are contingent appropriations, of which at least a portion must be met, to the amount of $274,400. Added to this the message estimated that the state's total indebtedness September 30th, as shown by the budget commission's report will be $2,750,000 and that if this deficit is divided into four years covering the Brandon administration, the annual total deficit will be $1,066,710.95.

The governor stated that he greatly regretted that the condition shown would prevent him from making recommendations for any increases in appropriations. He said the submission of the four mill tax and its ratification by the voters will remove all difficulties.

All during the eighth legislative week, up to the very moment the governor brought his message to the houses, appropriation bill after bill had been introduced on the floor of both House and Senate. Many of the measures brought sought increased appropriations for new purposes. The effect the governor's message will have on the disposition of these bills remains to be seen in the actions of the Legislature during the few more days allotted for its labors.

The Sunday observance bill proved a false alarm in the house when the members waited expectantly on Friday, August 31, for Representative Bealle of Tuscaloosa to make an effort to bring it back up in the house. Several of the members were awaiting to oppose the Bealle action and when he advanced at the time of introduction of new bills with a measure, they prepared for oratorical action. The Tuscaloosan, however, sprang a surprise by introducing a resolution for the registration of nurses in the state.

A bill to exempt veterans of the World War from paying state poll tax for all time was passed by the House Wednesday, August 29th, by a vote of 79 to 0. The bill proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state to be voted on by the people, which, if passed, will grant the exemption to all persons who served honorably in the United States army or navy from January 1st, 1917 to November 11th, 1918. Representative Holcombe, of Mobile, sponsored the bill.

A bill by Senator Teasley makes it a misdemeanor for a person to ride on trains without a ticket. The measure makes hoboing or attempts to evade paying fares punishable by a fine of from $100 to $1,000.

A favorable vote was given by the senate educational committee to a bill by Senator J. M. Foster of Tuscaloosa providing for children having their education retarded for a period of three years. The bill provided for mental clinics and special teachers for every ten children.

To provide an Alabama monument at the scene of the battle of Gettysburg is the purpose of a bill given favorable report in the House Friday, August 31st

HOUSE PASSES AUTOMOBILE SECTION OF REVENUE BILL

Bill As Passed Does Not Effect Pleasure Cars—Tax Is On Heavy Cars and Trucks.

Two outstanding events of the eighth legislative week were the passage by the House of the automobile section of the general revenue bill and the treatment the 'ag" code received at the hands of the House committee on agriculture. In the first case harmony existed, but in the second instance discord prevailed.

By a vote of 70 to 9, the House Wednesday afternoon, August 29 voted to pass the auto license section of the revenue bill. While the measure, as passed, does not affect the pleasure cars, it does levy heavy license tax on the heavier auto trucks and hearses as well as ambulances. License is also provided for all auto trailers.

Some fight was encountered on the measure when the point of ad valorem taxation on automobiles was reached. The clash came over a section which read "that on and after the first day of October, 1924, no license shall be issued to operate a motor vehicle on the highways of this state until the advalorem tax on such vehicle shall have been satisfied, evidenced by a receipt from the tax collector of the county. . . . . On and after the first day of October, 1924, every person, firm, or corporation who desires to operate a motor vehicle on the public highways of this state shall first return such motor vehicle for ad valorem taxation to the county tax assessor. . . . . Upon payment of taxes due on any motor vehicle the tax collector shall issue a motor vehicle receipt on a form prescribed by the state tax commission and such receipt shall be the authority for the probate judge to issue a license."

The terms of the measure are regarded by those who opposed it as requiring the automobile owner to pay ad valorem taxes on his auto, whether new or second hand, before he can take it from the dealer, as he cannot drive the automobile away without a

The proposed state "ag" code was emasculated by the House committee on agriculture Thursday, August 30th. The committee adopted the code favorably after they had torn it to shreds. The bill, as amended by the committee, provided that five of the seven proposed members of the state agricultural board shall be farmers. The director of the extension service was left entirely off the board. The state-wide stock law proposed in the bill was eliminated. A section providing that milk used in the manufacture of ice cream shall be pasteurized was stricken. Numerous smaller changes were made in the document.

The bill as proposed would create a board of agriculture with three farmers and four state officials. The officials were to be the state commissioner of agriculture, the director of extension service, dean of the veterinary school at Auburn, and the dean of the Auburn agricultural school. As amended five of the members must be dirt farmers. This tampering with the bill came as a distinct shock to those who had drawn its features.

The tax exemptionists never cease to lay their plans to exempt first one industry and then another. During a strenuous session Wednesday, August 29th, the Senate ran true to the policy shown by the present Legislature and lambasted a measure presented by Senator John Overton asking that tax exemptions be granted cotton mills and other manufactures during the construction era. There was a 16-16 tie when the bill was voted and it took the vote of Lieutenant-Governor McDowell to swing the bill off the floor into the discard heap.

Hardly had this measure been thrust out of the way before Senator Powell, of Tuskegee, introduced another exemption bill into the Senate calling for an exemption from taxation for cotton mills for a period of five years. The bill in many respects is similar to that of the defeated Overton measure.

The bill of Senator John Craft of Mobile to provide for the regulation of short loan making companies, charging high rates of interest was chloroformed by the senate committee on banking and insurance. The committee vote stood four to three against the bill.

A severance tax in Alabama, to be applied on all natural resources commercialized in the state would be made by a bill introduced in both houses of the legislature. Senator George W. Duncan of Limestone introduced the bill in the senate and Rep. Will O. Walton of Chambers in the house.

The tax would be levied at three percent on all products taken from the waters, the soil and the forests of the state.

The signing by Governor Brandon of the bill consolidating Albany and Decatur made the two towns one. The population of the new city is approximately 12,000.

Representative Letson, of Marion, has a bill to equalize the terms of all Alabama schools and to provide funds so apportioned. Mr. Letson says his bill is to prohibit the long terms of the white schools of the black belt at the expense of the public schools of the white sections.

By a vote of 18 to 10 the Senate has squashed the desire of Greater Alabama, Inc., for a nation-wide advertising campaign of Alabama's natural resources. The measure was indefinitely postponed.

ALABAMA NEWS HAPPENINGS.

A Resume of the More Important Events of Interest Condensed To An Epitomized Form.

An incident occured in Gransboro last week that accentuates anew the friendly feeling between the negro and white. Two old negro women willed their property to their white friends as an expression of their gratitude for kindness and good treatment during their association of some 30 years. One old woman was bedridden and entirely helpless with rheumatism, but she received the kindest care from her white employers, for whom she had worked so long. Her way of returning thanks was to will her small property to them. This they did not keep, but after paying for her funeral, they turned the remainder over to relatives. The other, who was accidently killed, was found to have willed her house and lot to the people for whom she had washed for 20 years continuously.

Beneath a fiery cross, between 1,500 and 2,000 candidates will be initiated into the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan September 11, at Edgewood Park, near Birmingham. A picnic is to be held, open to the public, prior to the naturalization ceremonies. The Birmingham Klan will be hosts. Visitors from the entire South are expected to be present and witness the affair. The ceremonies start promptly at 8 o'clock in the dry bed of the lake at Edgewood.

McTyeire, on account of some technicality in regard to the printing of the ticket. In the sale of bonds, the bond-buyer brought up the objection, that it necessitates the holding of the election a second time.

The special election held by the City of Mobile for a $350,000 bond issue, by official count was 464 in favor and 88 against, according to S. H. Hendrix, city clerk, who tabulated the returns. DAIRY FACTS

New World's Record for Butterfat Production

A new world's record for production of butterfat in one year over all breeds has been established by a Holstein cow owned by Baymondale farm at Vaudreuil, Quebec. DeKol Plus Segis Dixie freshening at the age of nine years and three months, and weighing 1,050 pounds, produced 32,464.7 pounds of milk containing 1,349.35 pounds of butterfat in 365 consecutive days. This amount of butterfat is equal to 1,686.69 pounds of butter. This production surpasses the former world record held by another Canadian Holstein cow by 5 pounds of butter.

Because of her previous high records of production, "Dixie" was placed on strictly official test, supervised by both the Holstein-Friesian Association of America and the Dominion department of agriculture of Canada, which supervises record of performance tests for all breeds of dairy cattle in Canada.

The new champion was fed a grain ration consisting of equal parts of bran, hominy, dried distillers' grains, gluten meal, oil cake and cracked oats. To 100 pounds of this mixture was added one pound of salt, one pound of charcoal and one-fourth-pound of bonemeal. She was fed at the rate of one pound of grain mixture to each four pounds of milk produced. Her roughage consisted mainly of mixed hay and some corn silage and beets. All of last summer she was let out to pasture two hours a day.

Fat production by the average dairy cow increases till she has passed her seventh year, reaches its peak before the end of her eighth year and then gradually declines. This fundamental truth in farming science was discovered recently by C. W. Turner, a teacher in the dairy department of the Missouri College of Agriculture.

This conclusion was reached only after Turner had worked out the relation between the age and the yearly fat production of more than 46,000 dairy cows. The data included all the yearly fat records available of pure bred dairy cows in the United States. This is the first time an intensive compilation of this sort has been carried out.

The value of this information lies in knowing what production may be expected of a cow at a certain age. For example, if a farmer knows the present production of a two-year-old cow and wishes to estimate what she will be worth to him in five years, he will have an authoritative table which he may consult.

A yearling produces 64.6 per cent compared to a cow at maturity; a two-year-old, 73.6 per cent; a three-year-old, 84 per cent; a four-year-old, 90 per cent; a five-year-old, 95 per cent, and a six-year-old, 99 per cent. After seven years the decline in production is gradual.

Of the total number of records examined, 13,723 were Jersey cows; 13,599 Guernseys; 12,504 Holsteins; 5,162 Ayrshires, and 1,014 Milking Shorthorns.

Increase of Butterfat Is Not Made by Feeding

According to experimental work that has been done, the percentage of fat in milk cannot be increased by feeding. The milk of each individual cow seems to have a fixed composition that is natural to her. True, the richness of the milk may be increased or decreased for a short time if the cow's digestive system is disturbed by sickness or improper feeding, but will return to the normal test in a short time. The quantity of milk may easily vary with feeding, consequently the total pounds of butterfat would be increased without a variation in the test. By having a cow in high flesh at the time of freshening, the test may be raised for a time, the supposition being that the body fat is drawn upon, but it only lasts for a short time, when the test returns to the point peculiar to the individual.

Pointers for Selection of Improved Dairy Cow

One or two signs tell a good cow. In a poor cow the thigh runs down straight, so there is no place between the thigh and the udder on one side and the tail on the other. There should be plenty of daylight between the udder and the tail. One of the best ways to tell what kind of a cow you have is by her temperament. A good dairy type has a sharp spine, and sharp hip bones. A good cow has a large wedge-shaped stomach.

Could See Big Change in Baby From the First

"I could see a big change for the better in baby right from the first when I began giving him Teethina; he grew quieter, his stomach pains left off and now he is as fat and healthy a child as you please," writes Mrs. Maude Neighbors, 1678 W. 4th St., Texarkana, Texas.

When baby is restless and fretful from teething or a disordered stomach nothing will bring such quick relief as Teethina. It contains nothing that can harm the most delicate child, but soothes and allays distress incident to teething and colicky conditions.

Teethina is sold by leading druggists or send 30c to the Moffett Laboratories, Columbus, Ga., and receive a full size package and a free copy of Moffett's Illustrated Baby Book.—(Advertisement.)

The Chilton County Democrats are keeping strict tab on the political situation now, and the fellow who flickers or faulters now will fare but middling here when the next election comes. We are going to reward our friends and punish our enemies.

An earthquake in Japan destroyed five large cities and killed over 200,000 people last week. Life, on this ball we inhabit, is a very uncertain thing. The veil between time and eternity is pitifully delicate and easily rended.

We have enlarged the News to 8 pages this week. We want an expression from our friends as to how they like it, and would like to have any of them make such suggestions as to improving the paper as they see fit. We want to please as many of our [illegible] as we can. Tell us about it.

OUR BIRTHDAY

With the issuing of the paper this week, the Chilton County News rounds out its second year of endeavor as a fair and square democratic paper in Chilton county.

The writer of these few remarks has been pushing the editorial [illegible] since the first copy was gotten out and is still on the job, at least for the present.

He knows, better than anyone else possibly could know, that never a line of editorial matter has been allowed to enter the columns of the paper that was not dictated by an undying sense of fairness and a paramount desire at all times, to appeal exclusively to the reason and not to the passions or prejudices of any reader.

We have striven to be absolutely fair in all things and have especially avoided the disgusting and degrading practice of dealing in dirty personalities and the slinging of mud.

We feel today, as we make a retrospect of those two years, and count up in our memory the many good, warm friends we have made, that our policy has been more than vindicated.

We have worn the yoke of no faction nor toted the skillet for any individual, but have rather tried to serve all the people to the very best of our ability with an eye single to doing the greatest good to the greatest number.

We have been loyal [illegible] democratic party, not so much from a feeling of sentiment, but from a fixed belief, born out by long years of study and close observation, that in the bosom of that party lies all of the safety and protection of the South that we have ever had, since the bloody days of the 60's, or can hope to have in the future from any political party that has yet been born.

The democratic party is just like all other political parties or organizations. It makes its mistakes and has its Benedicts Arnolds, but, with all that, it is the only party that has ever unfurled its banner over our heads and offered and given us protection from that greatest of all curses—negro social equality. For that one inestimable boon we can not possibly realize how any white American citizen in the South can fail to appreciate this munificent blessing that it has conferred upon us.

What we [illegible] said in all candor with a full realization of the fact that you have a perfect right to differ with us if you want to, and in this connection allow us to say, that the most foolish thing we can imagine is for friend to fall out because they can not agree about the right road to heaven or which is the best politics [illegible].

We are a democrat on principle, and feel like we know that we are right. If you differ with us on principle, we respect you for your honesty, and can and will be your friend just the same, if you will allow us to be, while feeling that you are certainly working against your own best interests.

Here we go for the third 12 months inning. We [illegible] you to travel with us and will guarantee to give you your time at the bat without fear or favor.

Yes, we don't ever want to be a member of the legislature. They are more consistently, and ever lastingly abused than any set of people in the state. SUGGESTIONS FROM GRAMMAR SCHOOL

I believe that most of the people of Clanton will do anything to improve your school. This is your school your money, and your opportunity. Believing that you are willing to assist us in improving this school, I wish to call your attention to a few suggestions that have the approval of the entire faculty.

More confusion arises on account [illegible] reaching the school building too early than from any other cause. Therefore, we ask you, when convenient, not to let your children leave home in time to reach the building earlier than eight o'clock. You can readily see what it means for the whole school to reach the grounds before the teachers arrive.

We also wish to ask you not to allow your child to stay in town after school nor at night unless necessary.

WOMAN'S PAINS LIKE TORTURE

Kentucky Lady, in a Dangerous Condition After a Siege of Influenza, Found Cardui Very Helpful.

Louisville, Ky.—Influenza left Mrs. Volney A. Handy, of 127 North Sixteenth Street, this city, in a dangerous condition. "I suffered tortures with my sides," she says, "and across my back. It seemed the pain would start at the back of my neck and down in my back and sides—a pain that felt like I was pulling in two. I couldn't stand on my feet. My limbs just gave way. . . .

"I had taken Cardui as a tonic. I knew it was good. I told my husband I would try it again. I had used other things without relief. . . . After one-half bottle of Cardui, the pain got less hard, and I seemed to relax. I could straighten up. After one and a half bottles, I was able to walk around and do my work. My back was stronger and the bearing-down pains left. I took altogether three bottles, and it strengthened me.

"Why, before I took Cardui, I was so nervous and in such a fix I couldn't eat or sleep. Afterwards my nerves were better. I gained my strength. I began to eat and sleep and was like another person."

Womanly pains cause great suffering, and a medicine that will relieve them is indeed worth knowing about. Thousands of women have written to tell that Cardui helped them, relieving such symptoms as those described above. If you suffer in this way—

RURAL WOMEN HELP THROUGH CLUBS

Demonstrator Explaining Use of Dress Form.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The achievements of women's clubs in Wisconsin under extension direction are described in a report recently received by the United States Department of Agriculture. Some 64 clubs have been organized in the state since 1919. In one county, Marathon, there are 30 clubs which have formed a county federation meeting twice a year to take up county-wide problems. During the past year each of these clubs has been working on the addition of labor-saving devices in the home. A number of homes have put in water systems, others have installed lighting systems, and many have purchased smaller articles to help the housewife. Several of the clubs are making paper dress forms and are planning to have every woman in the neighborhood who wishes one supplied.

In addition to what they have done to improve conditions in individual homes, these clubs have accomplished much commendable community work. One club installed a bubbling drinking fountain in the village school and bought good lights for the building. This club sponsors evening community meetings in the schoolhouse. Another club repaired, decorated and refurnished the town hall which is now their meeting place as well as the center for all community meetings. Still another purchased a moving picture machine for use in the rural community and displays good pictures at regular intervals. One has bought playground equipment and employed a play supervisor for the children of the village during the summer months. One club cared for a motherless family of children, helping the oldest girl to learn to cook and feed her family well, and clothing the children so that the family was kept together until the older ones were able to carry on the home without aid.

FRUIT CUP IS OFTEN USED AS APPETIZER

Mixtures Are Easy to Prepare and Require No Cooking.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Fruit cup is often used as an appetizer at the beginning of a luncheon or dinner, especially when soup is not relished. There is something particularly refreshing and pleasant about a mixture of mildly acid, slightly sweetened fruits, chosen because they combine well together.

Just as canalaoupe, grapefruit, orange pulp, strawberries, honey-dew melons, or watermelons in their various seasons are appropriate separately for an appetizer course, so mixtures containing any of these fruits cut up together with still other fruits have come to be popular at the beginning of the meal. There is no reason why these good combinations should be reserved for formal occasions. They are easy to prepare, requiring no cooking, and in most families more fruit is really needed than is actually served. The United States Department of Agriculture points out in Farmers' Bulletin 1313, "Good Proportions in the Diet," and in Farmers' Bulletin 871, "Fresh Fruits and Vegetables as Conservers of Other Foods," how important it is to supply the family with plenty of fruit at all times.

Most fruit cups are best if about a third of the material consists of either orange or grapefruit pulp, or both. The mild acid of these citrus fruits is needed to give zest to less definite flavors. Pears, peaches, apricots and pineapple, either fresh or canned, are delightful in small quantities in a fruit mixture. Any or all of these may be added according to the number to be served, the materials on hand, and the individual preferences. Banana and apple, judiciously used, are excellent. A little cantaloupe or watermelon, when in season, is good. A few Tokay or Malaga grapes, berries of any kind, sweet cherries, whether fresh or canned, add a decorative touch as well as additional flavor. One or two dates in each portion can be introduced in the same way. A few chopped nut meats, a little spiced preserve, some candied orange or grapefruit peel, citron, preserved watermelon rind or ginger are other suitable flavors for making a fruit cup that is a little out of the ordinary.

It is not possible to give exact recipes because the fruits on hand depend somewhat on the season and somewhat on the leftovers available. The equivalent of half an apple, banana, peach, or pear per person should be allowed, with plenty of orange or grapefruit. The following combinations may be suggested to serve six persons at different seasons: Winter, 2 oranges, 1 apple, 1 banana, 1 slice of canned pineapple, four cooked prunes; spring, 1 grapefruit, 1 canned peach, 1 banana, 12 white cherries, 12 strawberries; summer, 2 oranges, 2 slices fresh pineapple, one-half cantaloupe, 24 raspberries; autumn, 1 grapefruit, 1 pear, 12 white grapes, 1 apple, 1 spiced peach, 6 figs.

The fruit should be cut up in fairly small pieces for convenience in eating. This should be done at least an hour before serving time. Sugar should be sprinkled over the mixture according to taste, and it should be stirred well before standing.

If preferred, the fruit cup may be served for dessert instead of at the beginning of the meal. When used as an appetizer, the fruit mixture is usually served in sherbet cups or glass dishes with stems especially made for this purpose. These are set on tea-size underplates. Powdered sugar may be passed. As a dessert, fruit cup may be brought on the table in a large dish and served into berry dishes set similarly on underplates.

The same mixtures unsugared are suitable for fruit salad, with the addition of lettuce and mayonnaise or a special fruit salad dressing.

PLAN FOR WASHING SWEATER

Knitted or Crocheted Articles Often Lose Shape Unless Precautions Are Taken.

Sweaters, scarfs and other knitted or crocheted articles often lose their shape when cleaned unless special precautions are taken. The United States Department of Agriculture says the best way is to work as follows: Measure the article. Use lukewarm water and soap solution. Wash the article by squeezing rather than rubbing and keep it under water as much as possible. When lifting it, keep the hand under and put it into a pan. Rinse until the last water is clear. Squeeze out the water either with the hands or by putting through the wringer, keeping the hand under the garment to prevent stretching from the weight of the water. Put through the wringer several times, changing the folds to take out as much water as possible. Place on a covered table and stretch or pat into the original shape and size as shown by the measurements. If desirable, it may be pinned or fastened in place by thumb tacks.

LABEL FOR CANNED FRUIT

If Any Is to Be Sold by Housewife She Should Consult State Food Authorities.

While the careful housewife usually labels her jellies, jams, canned fruits and vegetables for her own later information, the United States Department of Agriculture suggests that if she intends to sell any of her products she should consult the state food authorities as to the regulations concerning weight or measure and ingredients and the proper labels to be used.

Household Questions

Watch the custards—if they are cooked too long they will be watery.

• • •

Add salt to starch water and it will prevent the starch from freezing out.

• • •

A shelf in the closet for shoes is far better than placing them on the floor.

• • •

To prevent mustard from drying in the mustard pot, add a little salt when making it.

• • •

When boiling eggs hard, use ones that are four or five days old. They peel very easily; the shell usually clings to a fresh egg.

• • •

Save the eggshells, tie up in cloth, and drop into the wash boiler while the clothes are being boiled, and the lime from them will help whiten the clothes.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 9

JOHN MARK

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:51-52; Acts 12:12; 25-13:5; Acts 15:36-40; II Tim. 4:11.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Eccles. 9:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—John Mark, One of Paul's Helpers.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Man Who Failed and Tried Again.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Warning and Encouragement From the Life of Mark.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Mark's Contribution to Christianity.

I. Mark's Home Life (Acts 12:12).

He had the wholesome influence of a Christian home, for his mother was a godly woman. There is no heritage to be compared to that of a godly home. Nothing has such a far-reaching influence upon the life of a young man as the memory of a praying mother. Even when it was so perilous to be known as a follower of Jesus, she was not afraid to have a prayer meeting in her home.

II. Mark With Jesus in Gethsemane (Mark 14:51, 52).

At the sight of the Roman guard, the disciples "all forsook Him and fled." This timid lad still followed the Lord till laid hold on by the young men. He then fled, leaving behind him his linen garment. This Gethsemane experience doubtless had a decided effect upon his life.

III. Mark a Servant of Paul and Barnabas (Acts 12:25-13:5).

Mark was with the company when Peter told of his wonderful release from prison. This, doubtless, made a great impression upon him and was the beginning of his desire to accompany the missionaries of the cross. He was not a missionary on the same footing as Paul and Barnabas, but an attendant upon them to look after their needs.

IV. Mark Deserting Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13:13)

We are not told the cause of this desertion. Three conjectures, one or all of which had a bearing upon his action, are offered.

1. Homesickness. His home was of easy circumstances if not wealthy. As they were carrying the gospel into the rough, mountainous country, occupied by rough, half-civilized people, the mettle of this young servant was tried. We ought not to condemn him too readily, for we know how trying it is to leave home when struggling against the rough world. While sympathizing with him, we must remember that duty is stronger than the tender ties of life. The time comes when the soldier must spurn the ties which bind him to father, mother, wife and children, in response to the call of duty. The missionary must turn his back upon home, native land, and friends in his devotion to his Lord.

2. Disbelief in Foreign Missions. There was a common prejudice among the Jews against taking the gospel to the Gentiles. When he saw that these missionaries were going to the "regions beyond," his prejudice may have caused him to turn back.

3. Cowardice. The dangers before them were not imaginary but real. The missionary today faces awful dangers: climate, wild beasts, deadly serpents and insects, and savage and cannibalistic men. However, fear is no excuse for cowardice because we are linked to the Almighty by faith; there is nothing in heaven or on earth that can harm us. Courage is required of those who would do the Lord's work.

V. Mark With Peter in Babylon (I Pet. 5:13).

Some years after Mark's desertion, when Paul and Barnabas were arranging for a second evangelistic tour, they had a sharp dispute over the question of taking Mark with them. Paul would not consent to Mark's accompanying them, so "they departed asunder one from the other." Mark went with his uncle. By this time he must have been cured of his cowardice for we see him associated with Peter in Babylon.

VI. Mark Honored by Paul (II Tim. 4:11).

Paul is now an old man in prison. Mark is a middle-aged man associated with Timothy at Ephesus. Mark had proved himself, for Paul gives the pleasing testimony that "he is profitable unto me for the ministry." Mark is an example of one who made good in spite of his early backsliding.

Heroism.

The world's battlefields have been in the heart chiefly; more heroism has been displayed in the household and the closet than on the most memorable battlefields of history.—H. W. Beecher.

You Must Be Calm.

The language of excitement is at best but picturesque merely. You must be calm before you can utter oracles.—Thoreau.

Little People.

I love these little people and it is not a slight thing, when they, who are so fresh from God, love us.—Dickens.

Greatness and Truth.

If any man seeks for greatness, let him forget greatness and ask for truth, and he will find both.—Horace Mann.

POULTRY

Early Molting Hens Are Poor Paying Proposition

What is the trouble with the poultry business? Why are fewer hens kept this year? Is the poultry business going backward? All these questions, and many more like them, have been asked recently.

What is the trouble with the poultry business? Would not any other business fail if it were conducted as the poultry business is conducted? Every female kept is not necessarily a good money maker. Some hens never lay. Some lay a few eggs. But it takes a hen that lays a good quantity of eggs to pay for her feed and return a fair profit above labor, interest, etc.

It has been proved beyond doubt that early molting hens are poor producers. Hens that begin to shed their feathers in July and August seldom start to lay before the latter part of January or the early part of February. Many poultrymen realize the necessity of culling out their poor producers in order to stay in the poultry business.

With the present prices of feed, it is absolutely essential that only the best hens be kept. One farmer last year selected from 500 laying hens 104 that he considered poor producers. No trap nests were used, but the hens were examined from external characteristics. These 104 hens were put in a house by themselves. The following day they laid four eggs.

The flock was again tested and the four layers were selected, leaving an even hundred unproductive hens. They were carefully watched for several weeks and did not lay an egg. At last they were sold. Similar instances prove that the selection of poultry pays. Why not save the tremendous amount of feed fed the poor hens and put it into better stock or human food?

Increase production and increase efficiency, by keeping the late molters. Hatch in September and thus increase the meat and egg supply of the country. Fall hatching of chickens will pay. Pullets from these hatches will take the place of the early molters disposed of. Breed only from the late molters. Selection is a big step toward greater poultry efficiency and to a more profitable poultry business.

Increasing Demand for Disliked Guinea Fowls

Guinea fowls, which have suffered unpopularity with farmers because of pronounced propensities for noise-making during the sleeping hours of humans, are likely to rise above this objection in view of a steadily increasing demand for their delicious flesh, in the opinion of a poultry specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture. Guinea-fowl raising now is a profitable side line on eastern farms and may offer opportunities to the commercial poultryman in a few cases. In Farmers' Bulletin 858, "The Guinea Fowl," the specialist discusses the guinea business from the starting of a flock to marketing the produce, which is largely meat.

Colony House System of Poultry Raising Favored

One of the many advantages of the colony house system of poultry raising is that the birds have ample opportunity to find animal food, such as bugs, worms, grasshoppers, etc. This is a very necessary part of the diet if you are raising poultry for the eggs they will produce. If you have movable houses for the flock, place them near fields likely to harbor destructive insects; this will protect the crop and at the same time provide the necessary animal food.

Outline of Good Ration for Growing Ducklings

A good ration for ducklings consists of one part bran, one part cornmeal, one part ground crackers or stale bread made into a mash. Then 10 per cent beef scrap is added, as well as fine green food and a little sand. Be sure that the bread is not moldy and that all other ground grains are of good quality.

POULTRY NOTES

The hen is the only thing on the farm that can make money by "just laying around."

• • •

Paint the outside of the hen house; make it look as though it belonged to somebody.

• • •

Much loss could be prevented if those engaged in the poultry business were to examine their flocks regularly for indications of disease of any character.

• • •

The white chicks that are somewhat dirty in color at time of hatching are the birds which turn out to be the best breeders at maturity.

• • •

Provide as much water per day as the poultry will drink. Keep all drinking vessels clean and scald them out frequently.

• • •

Don't overlook the value of feeding gritty substances to the poultry frequently. This performs the same mission for poultry that teeth do for men and animals.

"There are three ways to settle this," he said. "We can tear the bill in two and give each of you half, which would be foolish. I could keep it myself, which would be wrong. Since you can't have it, and I can't have it, let's give it to the Red Cross."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Gov. Pinchot's Efforts to Avert Suspension of Anthracite Coal Mining.

ITALY THREATENS GREECE

Murder of Military Commission in Albania May Lead to Another War —Germany Paving Way for Abandoning Passive Resistance in the Ruhr.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NEITHER the anthracite miners nor the operators were entirely satisfied with the compromise settlement of their differences suggested by Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, and the prospects at this writing are that there will be a temporary suspension of hard coal mining during which the maintenance men will continue at work at an increased wage. Parts of the governor's plan were acceptable to both sides, and it is presumed that negotiations will be carried further.

Governor Pinchot's proposition for a settlement of the controversy contained these four main points:

1. Recognition of the basic eight-hour day for all employees. If longer hours are necessary at certain times or in certain occupations, the overtime to be paid at the eight-hour rate.

2. A uniform increase of 10 per cent to all employees. This increase to take effect September 1.

3. Full recognition of the union by the operators, without the check-off, but with the right to have a union representative present when the men are paid.

4. Complete recognition of the principle of collective bargaining.

For three days and more the Pennsylvania executive, at the request of President Coolidge, had been studying the situation with the assistance of experts and conferring with the representatives of the operators and the miners. At the outset he served notice on both sides that the threatened suspension of anthracite mining on September 1 could not be allowed; that the quarrel was not a private one, and that the public, vitally interested, wanted to see justice done to both employer and employee but was tired of repeated strikes and suspensions. Wednesday night the governor laid his plan before the committees, again emphasizing the fact that public opinion would enforce a settlement.

Mr. Pinchot's proposal for an increase of wages was based on the calculation that 10 per cent would add 60 cents a ton to the cost of mining and that the operators, having made unusual profits during recent months, could easily absorb 10 cents a ton of this. The remaining 50 cents per ton, he said, "in the end should not be taken from the consumer," and he promised to make proposals later for getting this absorbed out of existing cost of transporting and distributing coal.

The employers' repeated tenders of arbitration to settle all present details of the controversy he set aside. He suggested that the wage and working arrangement he proposed should be made effective for not less than one year.

According to the United States coal commission, an anthracite strike would furnish another opportunity for wholesalers to repeat their speculative activities of last year and reap outrageously large profits. The commission stated that its inquiry into anthracite costs during the winter of 1922-23 led it to the conclusion that the speculative jobber or wholesaler was "the prime cause of the extremely high premiums paid for anthracite." It warned against panicky buying and urged retailers to join in combating the speculative tendencies of jobbers.

OVER in Europe the dogs of war began howling again last week. This time it was Italy and Greece that were shaking their fists at each other, and though there seemed really small chance of hostilities, the nervous statesmen remembered the somewhat similar situation between Austria and Serbia that developed into the greatest of all wars. Actually it was only Italy that was shaking a fist. A few days before the members of the Italian military mission headed by Gen. Ebrico Tellini, which with like missions from France and Great Britain was engaged in delimiting the Greco-Albanian frontier, were ambushed and assassinated between Janina and Santi Quaranta. Greece had been extremely dissatisfied with certain findings of the mission, and the fact that the Greek delegate who always accompanied the Italians was absent when the crime was committed convinced Italy that it was a Greek political plot.

Premier Mussolini therefore instructed Minister Montagna to present to Greece a written note in which Italy demanded:

"Ample excuses from the highest military authorities.

"Solemn funeral ceremonies in the Greek cathedral at Athens to be attended by all the members of the Greek government.

"Honors to the Italian flag on the part of the Greek fleet. Some units of the Italian fleet will be sent to Piraeus expressly to receive a Greek salute of 21 salvos.

"A thorough investigation and capture of the assassins within five days of the acceptance of this note.

"Capital punishment for the criminals.

"An indemnity of 50,000,000 lire (roughly $2,500,000), payable within five days.

"Military honors to the victims as they are put aboard an Italian warship for return to Italy."

Mussolini demanded a reply within 24 hours, and his government at once got busy with its army and navy. Part of the fleet left Taranto hurriedly under full steam for an unannounced destination, and other units were concentrated at Capo di Leuca, the point of Italy nearest to Greece. Huge mass meetings were held in various Italian cities and there were demonstrations against Greeks, but little violence.

In her reply to this ultimatum Greece rejected demands four, five and six, which were considered too humiliating. Demands one, two, three and seven were accepted in modified form.

The interallied council of ambassadors met in Paris and sent a message to the Greek government declaring that it reserves for the powers the right to make known eventually the penalties and indemnities which may be judged necessary in connection with the killing of the members of the Italian boundary mission. The British foreign office also got busy at once, making extraordinary efforts to prevent hostilities. It was understood that in case of a deadlock with Italy, Greece would propose to refer the entire matter to the League of Nations.

Italy was aggressive in two other quarters. To the astonishment of the other powers, she suddenly entered the Tangier question, landing a few soldiers in that African town and announcing that she must be considered in the settlement of its future status, which is to be made by England, France and Spain in conference in London. Mussolini also had made demands on Jugo-Slavia for a settlement of Fiume affairs satisfactory to Italy, and his virtual ultimatum expired Friday. It was reported that Italian troops were mobilizing in Fiume.

ELECTIONS in the Irish Free State passed off with surprisingly little disturbance. Final reports were not available last week, but it was believed that the government party would maintain its plurality in the new parliament. President Cosgrave and nearly all of the other government leaders were re-elected, but Eamonn de Valera was returned by County Clare, defeating Prof. John McNeill, Free State minister of education. Other republicans who won seats were Countess Markiewicz and Mary MacSwiney. The government deemed the situation so safe that President Cosgrave and some of his ministers left for Geneva to prepare for Ireland's entrance into the League of Nations. The republicans threatened to set up a rival parliament, but it may be not enough were elected to enable them to carry out this plan.

MISSISSIPPI also had what amounted to an election last week—the runoff primary of the Democratic party. The contest for the governorship was between Henry L. Whitfield, former president of the State College for Women, and Theodore G. Bilbo, former governor. The former was victorious by about 15,000 votes.

BEFORE this is in the hands of the reader Chancellor Stresemann of Germany may have resigned in order that passive resistance in the Ruhr may be abandoned, for it is held in Berlin that he cannot capitulate officially, and at the same time it is admitted that the nation cannot hold out much longer in its course of opposition to France and Belgium. Three things are breaking down Germany's resistance—the cost and scarcity of coal, the financial situation and the failure of Bavaria to co-operate. The Bavarian officials have made demands on Stresemann which he can hardly accept, and it is believed Bavaria may secede from the German confederation if the chancellor undertakes to put through his program of dictatorial measures.

Industrial leaders of the Ruhr and the Rhineland have consented to a scheme of gradual abandonment of the passive resistance, and this may lead to discussions between Germany and France. It was held significant, also, that a permit was granted for a meeting of representatives of Prussia, Bavaria, Saxony and other German states with the Rhineland commission at Coblenz.

BELGIUM'S reply to the British note was delivered last week, and was not very pleasing to either France or Great Britain. It upholds France on the Ruhr occupation, but hits France by suggesting that Germany's payments should be divided among the allies in proportion to their respective material damages. Adoption of the suggestion means that Belgium's war ravaged zone would be repaired at Germany's cost, while France would lose pensions for 1,600,000 killed and 2,000,000 badly wounded soldiers. Belgium would sacrifice pensions for 23,000 killed and 40,000 mutilated.

COL. ERNEST P. BICKNELL, Col. R. E. Olds and W. G. Pearce, American delegates to the International Red Cross conference in Geneva, got as far as Paris and then refused to proceed because of a statement in a Swiss committee report that was considered offensive to the United States. This read:

"The international Red Cross committee does not believe that in the domain of Red Cross work supremacy of influence must belong to those who are most powerful financially. Money, which permits creation of functionaries, is certainly useful, but it must not give them the impression that they are the masters of an institution such as the international Red Cross."

This was taken as a direct slam at America because of the founding of the League of Red Cross Societies by the late H. P. Davison of J. P. Morgan & Co. and the fact that American money made up 75 per cent of the funds needed for that organization's operations last year. Gustave Ador, president of the International Red Cross, cabled John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, that there was no intention of hurting American feelings and urging the Americans to attend the Geneva meeting.

CAPT. LOWELL SMITH and Lieut. John Richter, army aviators, broke six aviation records at San Diego, Cal. They were in the air more than thirty-seven hours, established four new speed records as well as making new marks in duration and distance. To complete the flight, they made 15 contacts with another plane to take on gasoline, food, water, and oil.

COTTON CROP IN AUSTRALIA

Shows Fine Staple in Pod, Though Growing Almost Wild in the Northern Territory.

Cotton in Australia has been found showing a very fine staple in the pod, though growing almost wild in the northern territory. Queensland is leading the way thoroughly and well in this matter. Expert and official opinion holds that a large portion of Western Australia is as suitable for cotton production as Queensland. Queensland is setting the pace. Last year 7,000 acres were under crop; this year the area is estimated between 80,000 and 100,000 acres. In two of its subtropical districts 3,000,000 acres are being opened up under the cotton prospects and 200,000 acres in another. The government is guaranteeing a minimum price of 5½d (11 cents) per pound for seed cotton. If cultivation responds the guarantee holds good for three years. The British Australian cotton association is helping with the erection of 48 ginneries. America demands more cotton; Great Britain is hungering for it. The world is looking for it. If Germany restores her prewar industry, then clearly the world's demand for some considerable time will be far ahead of the supply. Here is another golden opportunity for Australia.—A. S. Ledger, in Current History Magazine.

Birds on Abandoned Farms.

Naturalists have noticed that the abandoned farms offer great opportunity for the study of bird life, and the birds seem to frequent these localities for some reason. Edmund J. Sawyer of Syracuse, N. Y., who has commented on this fact in articles for various publications, says that while the birds to be found at these places are mostly of the commoner varieties, for purposes of close observation the abandoned farms offer great advantages because of the numbers to be encountered. Within 300 feet of one of these houses he found nests with eggs and young of eleven species.

Every mother possesses information of vital importance to her young daughter, and the responsibility for her future is largely in her hands.

When a school girl's thoughts become sluggish, when she suffers the consequences of wet feet, pain, headaches, fainting spells, loss of sleep and appetite, and is irregular, her mother should have a thought for her physical condition and try Lydia E. This Mother Writes:

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly praise your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. GEORGE E. WHITACRE, 621 W. Madison Avenue, Mahoningtown, Pa.

TRIP OUT WEST

Now, on this Sunday morning of July 22, 1923, that longing that has been a part of me so long has begun to be satisfied. But how strange it has all come about. Just a few miles from the point where I have entered these mountains, on the bleak, barren top of Lookout Mountain is the grave of the hero of that story I read when a mere child. A strange fancy in Buffalo Bill caused his remains to be placed among the rocks and snow on this mountain top. His grave is surrounded by an iron paling fence and marked by rough hewn granite from the tops of the mountains that his soul was so a kin to. A little cabin kept by a faithful old mountain friend of this adventurous man stands near the grave. The house is filled with knives, guns, robes and other relics of his career. And, after all of these years of fancying, imagining, and longing, I have driven up the canyon of the big Thompson into the very heart of the Rockies and around many a curve in the road where the bear fight could easily have occured.

We have leisurely followed the course of the Big Thompson for more than thirty-five miles and have pitched our tent for the first night in the Rockies near a Ranger camp, where a large camp of Boy Scouts from Ft. Morgan, Colorado, are having the most glorious time you ever dreamed of. But before I tell you more of these and this camp and tent life, I wish to go back and describe in more detail the canyon of the Big Thompson and our first days drive into the mountains.

The Big Thompson is one of the smaller streams that form the head waters of the Platte, through which the melting snows and rains in this part of the Rocky Mountains find their way into the Missouri and thence into the Mississippi River. The characteristics of all of these mountain streams are very much the same. I have had a splendid chance to study the Big Thompson for all day long it has dashed with mad fury at my side, at times almost directly under my car wheels: for the road is partly built up out of its channel and partly blasted out of the cliff in the side of the canyon. The canyon is seldom more than a stones throw in width: but very often precipitous sides extend two or three thousand feet above you. Most of the canyon walls have sufficient slopes to permit the growth of spruce and fur trees on them. These trees are not of the large varieties that are found further in the mountains and especially on the Pacific slope, only forty miles or so away. Trees here seldom exceed four feet in diameter and one hundred feet in hight. They are slender beautiful things, shaped like an ice cream cone turned up-side down, or perhaps the similarity would be better, if I should say like an icicle with point turned up. The limbs are small and extend horizontally out from the tree, somewhat like the feathers of a cock in a fight. They grow shorter and shorter until the tree at its topmost twig has tapered into a spear point. The trees grow as thick as they can stand on the ground. The tips of the limbs on one tree touching the tips of the limbs on the next one. But owing to the fact that the limbs become so much shorter as the tree stretches up into the air, the top of each tree is distinct from the forest surrounding it. Each top in the forest stands up bold and straight and all of them taken together present a picture very much like the pictures you see of ancient armies where each soldier holds his spear high above the heads of his fellow soldiers. The cliffs themselves are so like an ancient tower and the trees cling so closely to their sides that the whole mountain side can be easily imagined to be the picture of a battle in progress. Near you the trees are green, but on the topmost rows near the tree line and just below the snow, they, on account of the great heights and distance from you, become blue against the sky. And for miles upon miles the same picture runs along the canyon walls;—as far as the eye can see ahead and almost as high up as ones gaze can reach, is the same beautiful picture; merging from a dark green to a deep hazy blue bordered at the top with red granite rock, and relieved here and there by a tongue of snow not yet melted from the mountain side.

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Bailey have returned to Clanton now and are domiciled in the residence just vacated by Mr. H. T. Sims.

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY AIDS IN FIGHT ON WEEVILS

The offer of the Alabama Power Company to donate the use of certain of its properties in Montgomery to the Gulf States Chemical and Refining Company for the manufacture of calcium arsenate was unanimously approved by the board of directors of the power company at a meeting held recently at Mitchell Dam, it was learned Wednesday.

The offer includes the use of one of the conmapy's large brick structures and certain electrical equipment valued at about $250,000, and the services of one of the company's leading chemists, who has been devoting much time and study to experiments with the electrolytic process of calcium arsenate manufacture. Complete results of these experiments, which were conducted at the plant of the Federal Phosphorus Company in Anniston, the chemical labratories of the University of Alabama, and more recently in the labratories of the General Electric Company at Schenectady, N. Y., have been placed at the disposal of the Gulf States Chemical Company. All of these experiments were conducted by A. M. Kennedy, of the power company's labratories, under the direction and at the expense of the Alabama Power Company.

The plan of the Gulf States Chemical and Refining Company, which was announced several days ago by its president, J. A. Moore, Birmingham fertilizer factor, is to begin operation in time to have a supply of calcium arsenate on hand when the boll weevil makes its appearance in the 1924 cotton crop. It is understood that the entire output will be offered exclusively to Alabama farmers at prices low enough to put it within reach of every cotton producer in the state.

"It is the intention of our company," stated Mr. Moore, to utilize the power company's generous offer to the very fullest extent, manufacturing in addition to calcium arsenate such other insecticides and fungicides as will be of valuable use to the farmers of Alabama in the production of fruits, produce, etc., all of which will be marketed at the lowest possible cost to the farmer." —The Birmingham News, August 22, 1923.

A "YOUNG FOLKS" DINING

One of the most unique social events of the season was a dining given last Thursday, by Dr. and Mrs. S. J. Ezell to a few guests, whose silvery locks told the story of many long years gone by and whose dimming eyes marked the passage of many a millestone on the highway of life.

The guests present were Uncle Bud Dock Jones, Uncle Mose Robinson, Mesdames Heath, Deadwilder, Gore, Lee Hays, Williams and White, Aunt Pattie Smith, who was not able to attend, was remembered by a nice waiter of delicacies sent to her home

The eight guests who were present made an age average of their several ages and it showed 75 years and nine months as the average age of this bunch of young folks.

A second event of the kind is planned for the near future in honor of some of the other old folks of the city.

Our good friend, Mr. J. A. Burke, of Route 7, is still staying by us. He brought us a basket of fine green peas this week, for which he will please accept our thanks.

A GREAT CAREER

Miss Roberta Curry, who has been absent for the summer at Gary Springs ha returned home for a week or so before she leaves for New York to take a course of voice culture.

Miss Roberta has made a wonderful reputation as a sweet and cultured singer during her summer at the Springs and, as she returned home, the music lovers of Selma induced her to stop over there and sing for them.

I have thought for several years about a watering place for the stock that come to Clanton. As it is now the people who drive their stock here are forced to remain all day, find a place where they can get water for their stock. I have talked this condition with the Aldermen of our town for the past three years, nothing has been done and it appears nothing can be done.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS IN BRIEF

A Weekly Review of the More Important Activities of the Alabama Legislature.

By OLIVER S. MORTON, JR.

The Alabama Legislature returned to the halls of the capitol for the ninth week of its session with the resolve to speed up its labors in an effort to bring the session to a close before [illegible]. It drew a chalk mark across three more days of the legislative calendar, but little was accomplished.

The administraton was the big loser in the week's sessions. It saw the proposed four mill tax amendment turn pale and give its last gasp. Though the measure has not been voted in either of the two houses it became generally known and was accepted by the administration leaders that the bill had no chance of passing. Even Governor Brandon's efforts in behalf of the measure did not help it. Governor Brandon was quoted as favoring the passage of the amendment and is said to have advised his leaders on the two floors to turn all their attention toward the passage of special revenue bills.

The widely boosted four mill tax was thought to have an excellent chance of passage until Thursday, September 6th. The first intimation that all was not well with the measure came that afternoon when the bill which was on the special order calendar under a resolution which gave it precedence over all other special orders was not called for consideration. It was ignored and other measures were called up.

It was then announced that the administration acting under Governor Brandon's advice, would take up the special revenue measures which were introduced into the House Tuesday, September 4th. The ways, means and appropriations committee has been asked to speed favorable reports on the bills levying higher licenses on the retail dealers of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes and candies, including bills levying special taxes on various other articles and business.

Some fear was felt that the committees would not act speedily on the bills carrying special revenues. These are very much the last of all revenue bills to be introduced in the session by the night of the forty-second day, Friday, September 7th, was the deadline [illegible] committees [illegible] Lucas late. [illegible] the new [illegible] but [illegible] work [illegible]. The administration's attitude was expressed when Friday afternoon, September 7th, Governor Brandon sent a special message to the House requesting that it stay in session all of Friday afternoon and consider revenue bills. The solons, however, did not follow the wishes of the governor, but adjourned at 1 P. M., in accordance with an earlier resolution.

One noble achievement of the week was the passage of the House bill creating a state highway commission of three members. The bill was a substitute measure offered by Representative Goodwyn, of Montgomery and was passed with amendment by Representative Tunstall, of Hale, providing that members of the commission should be elected by the Legislature.

The passage of the three commissioner bill is considered as settling the long argument in both houses as to how many men shall constitute the board. Bills had been offered providing for from three to eleven commissioners. The measure adopted by the House provides for a chairman of the commission at a salary of $6,000 a year and two associate members, one in charge of maintenance and the other in charge of construction each to receive $5,500 per year. The bill is similar to the Foster bill passed by the Senate, except that the Foster bill provided for the appointment of the members by the governor. It is generally believed the Senate bill will adjust the matter and the House bill by Goodwyn will stand.

The House has passed a bill giving the Alabama Public Service Commission the power to require a railway to construct a new depot where an existing structure is inadequate.

The House committee on public health has returned an adverse report of the so-called "barbers' bill" proposing a state board of barber examiners to enforce certain rules and regulations on barbers of the state.

A bill, to prohibit the working of convicts in the mines longer than ten hours per day, was introduced into the House Thursday, September 6th, by Representative Bealle, of Tuscaloosa. The bill was referred to the committee on penitentiary and criminal administration.

Two distinguished visitors spoke in the halls of the Legislature during the ninth legislative week. On Tuesday afternoon, September 4th, United States Secretary of Labor James J. Davis addressed a joint session of the Legislature. On the following Friday, Dr. Miller Reese Hutchinson, now of New York, but formerly an Alabamian made a short address before the Senate.

Secretary Davis, in beginning his address paid high tribute to the State of Alabama. He said that it was in Alabama that he received the start that sent him on his way. Coming to America from his native country of Wales he labored for two years in Alabama around 1890, a part of which time he worked in steel mills in the Birmingham district. He paid a strong tribute to the vast possibilities of Birmingham for becoming an even greater industrial center.

It was particularly upon the subject of immigration that Secretary Davis drew the applause and approval of the Alabama lawmakers. He advocated selective immigration and exhorted Americans of all political faiths to join in the fight for a measure which shall say who can come to America and who cannot. Reiterating the statement that immigration was the paramount question before America today the labor commissioner declared, "It is a fundamental business problem of the United States. We have been 150 years raising the standard of labor and we will permit no one to let down the bars to lower waxes and to let in people who will work for 50 cents a day, where our workers are getting $5 or more. Such competition would, if immigrants were allowed to come in sufficient numbers reduce our country to the wage level of the Orient."

Secretary Davis espoused the cause of child welfare. He said that the children of America need a fair chance and congratulated the State of Alabama on the progress it has made toward the relief of its children. It is remarked about the capitol that the address of the secretary will show a great influence in the disposition of the child welfare appropriation bill now before the legislature.

Dr. Hutchinson's speech before the Senate was brief. He asked to not be allowed to delay the work of the lawmakers. After a few sketches of important inventions and the relations these had to the lives of nearly every one, he ended his talk by requesting the Senators not to forget the needs of education in Alabama.

With the resolve to speed up consideration of the mass of legislation yet pending before them the Alabama lawmakers evinced their determination when [illegible] September 6th the House held a night session. A number of local bills were disposed of though the body did not turn to the major measures. More night sessions both by House and Senate, are looked for before the quadrennial session is completed.

An income and inheritance tax measure has been introduced into the Senate by Senator Jones, of Barbour. The bill proposes a constitutional amendment giving the Legislature the right to levy an income tax on all incomes of more than $5,000 and on inheritances of every kind where the estate is of a value exceeding $50,000. The bill is submitted in the form of a resolution.

Anticipation of oil being struck in Alabama was made in the Senate when Senator Garth, of Huntsville, introduced three bills modeled after the Oklahoma oil laws. The bills provide for the regulation of crude oil industry and gas conservation. The Senator remarked that geologists were now exploring the northern portion of the state for oil and enthusiasm was evinced by several members that oil might be found in the state of Alabama.

The Senate committee on finance and taxation has reported favorably the sheriffs' feeding bill. The measure carries amendments specifying that the sheriff shall receive sixty cents for each meal for a number of prisoners not exceeding 10; fifty cents for a number not exceeding 20; thirty cents for a number that does not exceed forty; and twenty cents for a number up to 35.

Because of the constant buzz and fuss made in the Senate halls by the onlookers in the chamber, the Senate decided Thursday, September 6th, to bar all persons from the chamber during sessions except members of the Senate and those to whom the privilege of the floor has been extended, including members of the lower house and officials of the body. Hereafter members of third house and others who have been gaining the floor chamber will have to be content to sit in the gallery.

No county governing body can award contracts to a person or firm whose officials are related by blood with the county authorities, under a bill passed by the Senate and offered by Senator Randall.

The Tunstall measure to further provide for the revenue of the state by having tax assessors charge for the registration of automobiles has been passed by the Senate. The measure allows tax assessors to collect a [illegible] registered.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 16

LUKE, THE BELOVED PHYSICIAN

LESSON TEXT—Luke 1:1-4; Acts 1: 1; Acts 16:9-15; Col. 4:14; II Tim. 4:11.

GOLDEN TEXT—"A friend loveth at all times and a brother is born for adversity."—Prov. 17:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Luke's Story of the Great Physician.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Luke, Paul's Friend.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Luke Helped Paul.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Luke's Contribution to Christianity.

I. Luke the Historian (Luke 1:1-5; cf. Acts 1:1).

Luke was a writer of great distinction. His style is clear and picturesque. The pieces of writing left us are the Gospel of Luke and the Acts. According to Acts 1:1, the gospel was written to set down in order the things which Jesus began to do and to teach, and Acts 1:3 to show what the risen and ascended Lord was continuing to do and to teach. While here on earth He only began to do and to show certain things, but from His place of glorious exaltation, He is continuing His mighty work by the Holy Spirit through the disciples. Concerning the contents of the gospel, he asserts first, that the source of his information was recorded statements of eye witnesses. He assures us that these statements have been verified by him. Second, that he had made a systematic statement of these facts in order to strengthen the faith of his friend, Theophilus.

II. Luke the Beloved Physician (Col. 4:14).

He evidently was a skilled physician as his descriptions of the diseases which Jesus cured shows. His description of the symptoms of the diseases shows his capability. It was left to the physician to portray with vivid exactness the virgin birth by means of which the Eternal Son became Incarnate. He was not only skillful but tenderly sympathetic. This sympathy is shown in his portrayal of the Great Physician in His compassion for the poor, helpless and suffering people. What untold good a skillful and sympathetic Christian physician can do! No one gets so closely into touch with human life as a doctor.

III. Luke the Companion of Paul (Acts 16:9-15).

1. Paul's Need of a Physician. There is clear evidence that Paul had some physical ailment which made the service of a skillful physician most desirable. When the call came to go to Europe with the gospel, Luke joined Paul and became one of his most helpful companions. This is one example of what a faithful Christian physician can do.

2. Luke's Fidelity. "Only Luke is with me." He was no mere fair-away friend. He stood by Paul in storm and calm. Paul was now in the cold jail awaiting execution. What a great comfort it must have been to know that this faithful physician was with him. He was with him at Philippi, Miletus, Jerusalem, Caesarea, before Felix and Festus, on the voyage to Rome, with him in the Roman jail, through the Roman trial, and perhaps a spectator of his execution. It cost Luke a great deal to do this, but he no doubt considered it a labor of love, even feeling the call of God as really as Paul. Nothing is known of Luke after Paul's death. Tradition has some interesting things to say, but no word of certainty.

Courage.

Fear God, and take your own part. There's Bible in that, young man; see how Moses feared God, and how he took his own part against everybody who meddled with him. And see how David feared God, and took his own part. . . . So fear God, young man, and never give in! The world can bully, and is fond, provided it sees a man in a kind of difficulty, of getting about him, calling him coarse names, and even going so far as to hustle him; but the world, like all bullies, carries a white feather in its tail, and no sooner sees the man taking off his coat, and offering to fight its best, than it scatters here and there, and is always civil to him afterwards.—Borrow.

When a Man Gets Angry.

The man of patience and of righteous purpose accomplishes something worth while when he gets angry. Every ounce of his energy is gathered and directed toward a good result. It is the moral steam controlled and made to hit a definite piston that sends this old world upward and onward.

Blind Fanaticism.

The blind fanaticism of one foolish honest man may cause more evil than the united efforts of twenty rogues.—Grimm.

Forgiveness or Sin.

Said General Oglethorpe to Wesley, "I never forgive." "Then I hope, sir," said Wesley, "you never sin."

Forgiveness.

Two persons cannot long be friends if they cannot forgive each other's little failings.—Bruyere.

THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

The Alabama Public Utility Act

The protection of the public against monopolies, unreasonable rates and inadequate service, and the right of the public to require adequate service on the part of utilities under honest, efficient and economical management are provided for in the Federal Water Power Act of Congress and the Alabama Public Utility Act, both having become the law in 1920.

The Federal Water Power Act (which was discussed in a former advertisement) fully protects the public interest in the DEVELOPMENT by utilities of the power generated from navigable streams.

The Alabama Public Utility Act fully protects the public in the DISTRIBUTION by utilities of the power generated from navigable (and non-navigable) streams.

Under this Act the Alabama Public Service Commission is vested with authority to supervise the activities of light, power, gas, street railway, and other utilities. Such supervision of a utility embraces among other subjects its construction and extensions, its rates, regulations and returns, and the issuance and sale of stocks and bonds: its service to the public, its management and operations, and its books, records and accounts.

Construction of Extensions, Additions, Etc.

Except for the construction of ordinary extensions of existing systems in the usual course of business, no plant, property or facility of any utility shall be constructed until the Commission shall have granted at a public hearing a certificate of convenience and necessity. The Commission has discretion to grant or withhold such certificate and to prescribe such conditions upon its issuance as it may deem advisable. (Sec. 49.)

Certificate Limited

Unless the utility to which such certificate is issued shall exercise the same within one year from the grant thereof, the authority afforded thereby shall be lost and the certificate become null and void. (Sec. 50.)

Abandonment of Service

No portion of the public service shall be abandoned except upon the issuance of such a certificate. (Sec. 51.)

Rate, Regulations and Returns

The Commission has "general and exclusive power" to fix rates and regulations. Only such just and reasonable rates will be allowed as will enable the utility at all times fully to "perform its duties to the public and will, under honest, efficient and economical management, earn a fair net return on the reasonable value of its property devoted to the public service." (Sec. 24.)

For a utility to charge any rate, enforce any regulation, or enter into any contract not approved by the Commission is unlawful and a criminal offense (Secs. 17, 18, 25, 33) subject to punishment by a fine of $1,000.00. (Sec. 69.)

Valuations

The valuation of property on which rates are based is made by the Commission. Only such property is considered as is used and useful in the public service. (Secs. 14-16.)

Reserves for Renewals

The utility shall maintain proper reserves for "renewals, replacements and reasonable contingencies," and shall make such reasonable improvements, extensions and enlargements of its plants, facilities and equipment as may be necessary to meet the growth and demand of the territory which it is under the duty to serve.

Stocks and Bonds

No utility is permitted to issue its stock or bonds without the approval of the Commission which by formal order must determine that the proceeds of the sale are reasonably necessary and appropriate for the purpose of carrying out the corporate purposes of the utility, and that the sale will not impair the ability of the utility to perform its proper service to the public. The Commission must fix the price at which the securities shall be sold to the public and, if bonds or preferred stock, the rate of interest to be paid thereon. A report of the sale of such securities must be made to the Commission within ten days after such sale. (Secs. 6-9.)

Further discussion of the authority of the Alabama Public Service Commission over public utilities will appear in our next advertisement.

GEMS OF THOUGHT

One of the most important rules of the science of manners is an absolute silence in regard to yourself.—D. H. Aughey.

It is the mind that makes the body rich; and as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds, so honor peereth in the meanest habit.—Shakespeare.

Men might go to heaven with half the labor they put forth to go to hell. If they would but venture their industry in the right way.—Ben Johnson.

Nothing is so great an instance of ill-manners as flattery. If you flatter all the company, you please none; if you flatter only one or two, you affront the rest.—Swift.

Rebuking Helen.

The girls were calling upon their grandparents, their first visit for several weeks. Naturally they felt they must tell all the news they could possibly think of, so talked incessantly.

Helen had the floor, telling all about the terrible ailments she had been troubled with for a long time.

Betty Ann tried in vain for a chance to talk. Finally she exclaimed: "Aw, Helen, you're always braggin' on your self."

AROUND THE WORLD

Quito, the capital of Ecuador, has no regular water supply. Water carriers bring the water into the city in jars.

Scandinavian women, including the women of Finland, are said to enjoy a greater degree of independence than in any other part of the world.

Probably the largest plant in the world is the gigantic seaweed found in the South Pacific. It grows in the water to a height of 300 feet.

The Veddas, now an almost extinct race of Ceylon, have two remarkable characteristics. None of them have been known to laugh and they seem unable to tell a lie.

Although many of the blacks in South Africa go barefooted rubber heels are very popular among the medium and poorer classes in that country.

Production of Spinach Seed.

Over 313,000 pounds of spinach seed was raised commercially in 1922, according to reports reaching the United States Department of Agriculture. This is an increase of 1,100 per cent over the production of 1921, but is only about two-thirds of the five-year average production.

Vezin's Slight Mistake.

Charles Vezin said recently: "Four years ago I chucked the double life of commerce and art for the single blessedness of painting. While exploring rural New England for a sketching ground I injured my shoulder and called in the professional services of a country practitioner. He was a gentleman of culture and high professional attainments. I left that section, asking the good doctor to send me his bill. He did not do so until a year and a half later, when I received, when in a different state, his bill for professional services—$150. I looked at it aghast and thought: 'Well, that is going some. A hundred and fifty dollars for three visits to the office of a country practitioner.' And I said to myself: 'You confounded medical profiteer, I'd like to see you get it!' and was about to write him what our English friends call a 'smoke' letter. But on thinking it over I decided to pretend to think that he meant to write fifteen instead of a hundred and fifty, and mailed a check for fifteen dollars with his bill. Three days later I opened a letter from him returning my check. And I murmured: 'So you are going to insist on payment. Well, you can sue me.' On reading his letter I found these words: 'Dear Mr Vezin—I herewith return your check. You made a mistake. My bill is one dollar and fifty cents.'"—San Francisco Argonaut.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

"THE CAPTAIN JEAN!"

SYNOPSIS—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an old-time friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile.

The stranger's face was all but averted. The profile gave the impression of utter obliviousness to the crowded room. His English small-clothes were rather passe for the period; and the powdered hair above a coat of blue broadcloth, his buff breeches, and silk stockings thrust into low silver-buckled shoes gave a quaint distinction to his tall figure. The two young men watched his bronzed hand turning a card under the ruby light. After a moment Jarvis yawned audibly; and then a nudge came between him and the Count de Almonaster. They looked down upon the short, stout form of Dominique, the alderman. Behind him peered Beluche, the restless seaman of Cartagena.

The artist strolled again to the barroom. Not even the buzz of interest that followed a violent exclamation in the cardroom lured him again from his cognac. But Dominique, the alderman, had started to his tiptoes with a curious glance at his fellow-buccaneer. "A voice?" he whispered, and stared past the onlookers.

The British officer, flushed with drink and chagrin, had leaned closer to his opponent. "Do you question my word, sir, as to the worth of the wench? Put her upon the block at the Rotunda tomorrow! She would fetch three thousand dollars at Charleston; and in this town, sir, if you will find a fairer one—slave, or free woman of color—or even among its reputed beauties—"

There was a stir; the Creole gentlemen glanced at one another darkling. Langhorne, the consul, raised his hand, but Sazarac had answered slowly:

"Your pardon, sir. I did not know the—the—she was a chattel. I own no slaves, sir, nor do I care to wager for one."

"You shall play on, sir. You have ruined my fortunes on this river voyage, and in last night's play! I demand my chance at retrieving. You have just accepted my two horses in pledge. Now, then—this San Domingo girl, upon the card, sir!"

Sazarac gathered the long rough surtout about his shoulders as if to arise. The consul whispered to the red-faced Carr. The dealer sat back with a glance at the circle of faces.

"You cannot leave!" Carr cried hoarsely. He turned to those behind him: "Gentlemen! Is it customary, in New Orleans, for a loser to be refused any legitimate wager that may reinstate him?"

There was a murmur; it was the code at Maspero's. The stranger must know. De Marigny whispered: "He has Sazarac there. The stranger must play!"

The stranger glanced about. Carr struck the table violently.

"It is my privilege, gentlemen! A card, sir! The turn of one card, instead of running the deal! No chance, then, for trickery!"

The stillness became acute. It was a bad word at Maspero's. De Marigny expected the next instant to see the unknown gamester fling his glove into Carr's face. But the quiet profile did not change. Langhorne clucked in his throat as if the situation were intolerable—as if, indeed, more portentous things than a slave girl hung on the turn of the card.

"The card, then—" Sazarac went on slowly. "Three thousand dollars on the red against the bond girl."

"Taken—" Carr bowed. "The black will turn, gentlemen!"

The dealer threw the cards in a semicircle across the cloth. Deliberately, but with a flash of his white fingers, he picked one at random and turned it up.

It was the ace of hearts.

The groups watched it curiously. Captain Sazarac arose, threw his cloak higher about his face, although the day was warm, and turned to go. The dealer, at a gesture from him, swept the notes and gold upon the cloth, into a leather bag. The groups broke up with a comment here and there; the gentlemen by the door gave away to the stranger as he advanced.

Colonel Carr had started sullenly at this abrupt dismissal by his victorious opponent. Whatever wild word was upon the ruined man's lips was checked by the consul's muttered warning. But Carr, too, arose, following a pace to growl over the crowd at the door.

"The girl, sir, will be at your disposal at the hotel at whatever hour you claim your property!"

The stranger bowed. Out in the drinking-room he seemed like one conscious that the eyes of all New Orleans' men of affairs were upon him. Just outside the door he stopped abruptly. In the shadow of the arched courtway of St. Louis street two squat, short figures, their heads together, their arms gesticulating wildly, were vainly trying each to quiet the other.

"You know it is!" gasped the worthy alderman, holding his side. "By the Lord!—I am not fooled—no, no! Shaven as a priest, his hair whited as an English squire's—muffled by stock and peruke—no, nothing deceives these old eyes of mine!"

"Thou d—d fool—silence!" whispered the swarthy admiral of Cartagena. "Is there not still a price upon his head—an added price since he renounced the President's pardon, and involved himself in that affair of Galveston island? Spanish, English—the Americans, too—they would bound him to the gallows!"

And from them all a young man had advanced smilingly. In his full-skirted green coat and shining white breeches held within his polished Hessian boots, the young Count de Almonaster bowed gracefully and extended a hand all but hidden by his beruffled cuff.

"At the green room of Maspero's, sir, none play save those to whom New Orleans extends its hospitality. If, perchance, at any time, the name of a gentleman could serve in a possible affair, I am the grandson of Don Almonaster y Roxas."

"I thank you, Monsieur." The stranger extended his own. "I am Captain Gaspar Sazarac, recently on service with the United States explorations in the West." He shrugged smilingly: "I thank you, Monsieur."

He turned and met again two elderly men who stared unbelievingly. Then the gold-laced admiral of Cartagena placed hand upon his shoulder.

"Behold us!" he whispered. "I—Beluche—and this, old Dominique! Dogs of old days and green seas! And you—the Captain Jean!"

The stranger gazed at them questionly. "It may be," he mused, "that after the heat is done, I shall take the air upon the levee by the old Fort St. Louis. The gentry do not promenade just there, I believe."

Before the eyes of the watching burghers at the coffee house he sauntered down the cobbles of the rue Chartres. The fat and honest alderman muttered; and then, at a laugh from the young count, he turned to stare fiercely at him.

"I shall take the air upon the levee myself, sirs," smiled Raoul. "Ho! Dominique! Do not fail your captain!"

CHAPTER II

A Ship for a Pirate's Eye.

It was dusk when Raoul de Almonaster sauntered along the moldering brick parapet of the little pentagonal fort that marked the upper river junction of the dismantled city wall with the green-scummed moat built to defend the landward side. Along the inner levee face he presently saw what he had come to see. Dominique, the honorable councilor of the city, and the resplendent admiral of the republic of Cartagena, even now fighting for its life against the king o' Spain's men across the Caribbean sea.

"Well, I Am Lafitte. I Am at Your Mercy, Monsieur!"

The small carronade which marked the hour of retreat—eight o'clock—barked at the city hall. At once, slaves and children, soldiers and sailors, must be off the streets of the Vieux Carre. The lazy boom of a warship down the crescent bend of the Mississippi answered; and, following the sound idly, the count's eye noted, before the plaza, a long, black, rakish clipper with shining yellow masts, new sails glistening as they hung to dry, and untenanted decks, sweet and clean as a ballroom floor.

"A beauty, that Seraphine!" he mused. "The latest Yankee, out from Boston, cannot match her. Ho, Beluche! She must make old blood stir in you two adventurers! Aye, turn your envious eyes aside!"

He started at a step on the levee. The gamester of the Bourse de la Maspero had come along the dismantled rampart of the fort. Sazarac bowed with a recognizing smile. The bronzed cheeks looked even darker below the whited wig; his eyes had the level, thoughtful humor of the man who laughs behind unreadable reserve.

"You may well say, Monsieur de Almonaster. I have not seen in years a hull so cleanly lined."

De Almonaster glanced at the hand upon the silver sword hilt. The two rotund respectables had seen the tall man in buff and broadcloth, and were hastening. "I see, Monsieur," retorted he, "that, despite your services with the American explorations in the West, you know a ship?"

"I have seen the sea, Monsieur." Sazarac bowed with a searching glance at the younger man. "And you—an eye for a ship is an eye for a woman. . . . I did not expect to meet the Count de Almonaster so far from the fashionable promenade?"

"Nor I to find Captain Lafitte so near again to the Place d'Armes!"

Sazarac studied him gravely: "Your pardon, sir! I think—"

Raoul snapped his fingers laughingly at old Dominique puffing up the levee. Admiral Beluche had drawn a cutlass in fervent salute to his captain.

"Come—come, gentlemen!" Sazarac's voice raised sharply.

"Lafitte of Barataria. Come, you—sir! Did you think you could tread these streets and not be recognized?" murmured De Almonaster.

The two old adventurers crowded around the stranger. "Now, I am a man again," chuckled Dominique. "And not a clerk drooling over city affairs!" And suddenly, with an affectionate gesture, he lifted slightly the whited peruke above Sazarac's ear. Raven black the hair, tinged with gray. "The beard shaven," droned on old Dominique. "The cutlass scar concealed which you got from the Spaniard at Trinidad! And these arms caught you as you fell!"

The Captain Sazarac was laughing in turn. His old lieutenants seized his hands, stroked his sleeve, crying out brokenly. Sazarac glanced keenly at young Almonaster.

"No fear," mumbled the alderman. "I have heard this young gallant say but yesterday that he would draw sword in any affair if Lafitte was to command!"

"Aye, for the emperor!" growled Beluche. "The clipper, Jean! Did you ever see a finer? Monsieur Girod brought her from Charleston new from the ways! The finest teak—lacquer tables, tapestries smuggled from Bilboa! All for the fallen emperor! Perhaps you have heard, my captain?"

"We were saying who so worthy to command as Captain Lafitte?" fumed old Dominique, eager as a boy, "did we not, young sir?"

Sazarac smiled. Raoul interposed: "The plot! Ah, yes . . . the plot!"

"They have built a mansion for him in the rue Chartres—" protested Dominique. "Financed the ship—not a first family in all Louisiana that will not have at least a midshipman aboard! But old Bossiere to command—bah! I would balk at it if I had a skin to risk!"

"You might well with the English ring of ships around St. Helena," said Sazarac gravely. "Well, I am Lafitte. I am at your mercy, Monsieur!"

The restless eyes of Beluche were upon a trio of officers from the American garrison who came slowly along the promenade. "Too much talk!" he muttered. "Since that old affair of yours, Jean—the seizure of Galveston island, despite the President's pardon, you have long been proscribed. As to this emperor—the devil with him! The Seraphine—look at her now! Is she a toy for the dandies of this town to play with? A ship—Jean, and a good ship?"

"Eh?" put in Alderman Dominique: "Robber, what's in your mind?"

"The American officers—" retorted the admiral. "Let us be on."

"The Yankees—" murmured Sazarac, throwing his silken neck scarf higher as the meeting groups saluted courteously. "When will Louisiana be done with this idea that she is a principality aloof from the Washington government? The Yankees, gentlemen, are here taking your little Paris."

"They might better have left their manners in the Kentucky woods," said De Almonaster. "And cease meddling in the affairs of Spain across the Sabine. You, yourself, sir—what is the feeling in the West?"

Sazarac stopped to look over the darkening river. "It is a far road to Washington. In the Ohios there is gossip. A new republic to be carved from the wilderness, the Spanish provinces to be seized; and among the discontented spirits are the exiled Tories from the Canadas and the agents of His British Majesty ever watching with jealous eyes. You saw, sir, the affair of yesterday at Maspero's?"

"Colonel Carr, who came with you down-river? I cannot make his mission out as I might wish."

"Nor I. Now and then, on the packet, he boasted of curious things. I recall, one night, a lady warned him to silence!"

"The lady?" De Almonaster smiled.

"Tonight I shall claim my wager from Colonel Carr."

Origin of Goldfish.

Goldfish are the result of the elimination of the somber colors in a variety of carp by selective breeding begun by the Chinese and Japanese in the Sixteenth century.

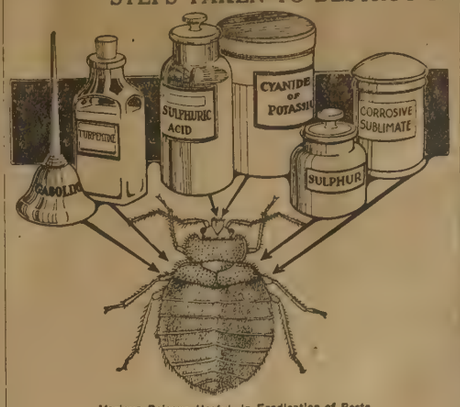
BEDBUG IS NOT DISGRACE IF STEPS TAKEN TO DESTROY IT



Various Poisons Useful in Eradication of Pests.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Trunks, wraps and traveling bags may furnish a means of transporting bedbugs into the house. Not infrequently they gain access to impeccably clean premises in the laundry basket. Sometimes they migrate from one house to another, or from one apartment to another along heating or water pipes. The only odium attaching to the discovery of a bedbug is failure to take immediate steps to eradicate it, with all its possible progeny. Outside of the question of personal discomfort caused by their bites, bedbugs are possible carriers of disease and therefore are dangerous housemates.

Bedbugs hide in the daytime in cracks in the wall or wood trim of the room, under wall paper, in joints of the bedstead or spring, in the tufts or binding of the mattress. They come out at night in search of food, which is human blood. The same bedbug, it is believed, bites only once in from six to ten days, retiring to digest its enormous meal in quiet; more bites indicate a serious infestation which should be promptly dealt with.

Fumigation Is Effective.

Fumigation of a badly infested house or room with hydrocyanic-acid gas is the most efficient remedy, but owing to the deadly poisonous nature of the gas this method must be used only by careful and well-informed persons. Farmers' Bulletin 699 gives directions for this kind of fumigation. Farmers' Bulletin 754 describes the life history, habits and means of control of the bedbug. Both bulletins are available upon application to the United States Department of Agriculture as long as the supply lasts.

The fumes of burning sulphur are recommended as a remedy under some conditions. They readily destroy the insect in all stages, including the egg. There is, however, some risk of injury to hangings, wall papers and fabrics from the strong bleaching quality of sulphur fumes. Formalin gas and the vapors of benzine, naphthaline and camphor, which are sometimes used, are of little value and insect powders are not effective because they do not get into crevices.

Best Simple Control Method.

The best simple method of control is a liberal application of benzine, kerosene or gasoline, introduced with small feathers or brushes or injected with syringes into all crevices of beds, furniture or walls where the insects might be concealed. The baseboard and picture molding of the room should be given attention and also the backs of pictures. Corrosive sublimate and oil of turpentine may also be used in this way. Many of the commercial remedies offered for sale contain one or another of these ingredients. Hot water will destroy both bugs and eggs if it can be used without damaging the furniture.

The most important part of the campaign against the pest is a daily inspection of beds, bedding, seams, binding and tufts of mattresses, and all parts of the spring and bedstead, wall and room where the vermin might be concealed.

EXCELLENT WAYS TO USE LEFT-OVER MEAT

Suggestions Offered for Utilizing Small Pieces.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cold roast lamb and mutton sliced is excellent, but the family may be tired of having the remains of the roast served that way, or the pieces may be too small to slice. In either event, these suggestions for utilizing this kind of left-over meat, offered by food specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture, will be appreciated by the one who prepares the family's meals.

Minced Lamb.

Chop pieces of cold roast lamb fine. A pint of chopped meat will serve a family of five or six. Rub one tablespoonful each of butter and flour together; add one-half pint of milk, stir until boiling; add tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and a dash of cayenne. Add the meat and stand over hot water until served. If served on toast trim the toast and butter and cover with a thick layer of the mince, making a little hollow in the center. Into this hollow (if you have plenty of eggs and want a heartier dish) put a poached egg. Six will be required for this quantity of meat.

Cutlets of Cold Mutton.

From a leg of mutton, cooked rare, cut pieces about the size of an ordinary loin chop. These may be fried in a little fat, or egged, crumbed and fried in deep fat, or they may be brushed over with fat and broiled. The result is more like meat cooked for the first time than the ordinary warmed-over meat. Cutlets so prepared may be served with any of the sauces served with chops.

Steamed Mutton and Rice.

4 cupfuls cooked or 1 cupful raw rice.
2 cupfuls cooked mutton cut into small pieces.
½ teaspoonful salt.
¼ teaspoonful pepper.
Few drops onion juice.
1 tablespoonful chopped parsley.
¾ cupful bread crumbs.
1 egg.
Stock or water.

Grease a mold or a bowl of about 1½ quarts capacity and line with cooked rice. Heat the meat with the other ingredients, using enough stock to make a mixture that is moist, but will hold its shape. Pack the meat in the center of the mold and cover with the remaining rice, grease the cover of the mold (if a bowl is used, a plate will serve for a cover), steam or cook in water enough partly to cover the mold until the contents are thoroughly heated through.

ONION IS EFFECTIVE CURE FOR PNEUMONIA

Simple Remedy Formulated Many Years Ago Is Unearthed.

The old argument as to whether the onion is an undesirable citizen seems likely to be decided in the negative, now that somebody has discovered that a diabetes cure lurks somewhere alongside the smell. The onion has other good qualities. It is effective in curing or preventing pneumonia, said the health board of Washington, N. J. The formula, as it appeared in the papers of Washington, is as follows:

"Take six to ten onions, according to size, and chop fine, put in a large spider over a hot fire, then add the same quantity of rye meal and vinegar, enough to form a thick paste. In the meanwhile stir it thoroughly, letting it simmer five or ten minutes. Then put in a cotton bag large enough to cover the lungs and apply to chest as hot as patient can bear. In about ten minutes apply another, and thus continue alternating and jolting on the wagon wears ened my kidneys. My back was so lame and weak I couldn't lift anything at all and when I stooped I had a sharp, quick pain in my back. I heard about Doan's Kidney Pills and two boxes rid me of the trouble. I believe the cure is permanent."

Women Tell Each Other How They Have Been Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Perrysburg, Ohio.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my sides all the time. I can't remember just how long I suffered, but it was for some time. One day I was talking with a lady I met on a car, and I told her how I was feeling and she said she had been just like I was with pains and nervous troubles, and she took the Vegetable Compound, and it cured her. So then I went and got some, and I certainly recommend it for it is good. Whenever I see any woman who is sick I try to get her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ADA FRICK, Route 3, Perrysburg, Ohio.

In nearly every neighborhood in every town and city in this country there are women who have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the treatment of ailments peculiar to their sex, and they take pleasure in passing the good word along to other women. TO OUR PATRONS

Our [illegible] as a newspaper having been rounded out with the issue of last week, we now make our bow and enter into the new year with an added zeal and desire to give you a paper wholely acceptable to every member of your family as a weekly visitor.

You realize we suppose, that a democratic paper in Chilton county has to depend for its support entirely on the friends it can make and the patronage it can win on its merits. It does not participate in any of the tax money that is paid out for legal advertising and commercial printing, and this in itself amounts to several thousands of dollars a year in our county and goes a long ways towards keeping a paper on easy street.

This statement is not made with any intention of criticizing the system, but is a plain statement of facts in the way of business.

With this handicap to begin with, a democratic paper here is saddled from the very first day of its establishment, a large number of people never stop to look at the facts, but jump to erronious conclusions as to the matter of service.

So much for that. Now here is what we wish to say: Those people in the county who desire the existence of a democratic paper here, should realize the necessity of giving their patronage to that paper and to enable it to meet expenses and to put out a paper worthy of their support.

The Chilton County News is going to continue publication, even if the expenses of getting out the paper are more than the income, but we don't believe the democrats of the county would be willing for this burden to be born by a few of the faithful, when by paying the small sum of $1.00 per [illegible] 12 months subscription would [illegible] towards making the paper [illegible] running.

We have now about 700 subscriptions that are due. If every one of [illegible] would promptly send in their dollar it would be a wonderful help and an inspiration to us and our backers to press forward in the good work.

We earnestly invite you every one to stay with us for another year and hold up our hands while we strive to give you a clean, fair and square democratic paper.

Don't wait a personal dun nor for your paper to close its regular visits to your home, but bring or send your dollar and help us to carry on the work that the party has started.

A DISHEARTENING PROSPECT

Last Saturday Mr. George Tippett, [illegible] on the Arthur Thompson place on Route 1, brought 10 stalks of cotton to town that were over five feet tall and well limbed, and there was not a boll nor a form on the whole [illegible].

This cotton, under normal conditions would have easily made 450 pounds of lint to the acre. Mr. Tippet says it put on as fine a crop as he ever saw, but the boll weevils litterally cleaned it up.

The same story was told by a number of farmers who were on the streets and looked at the sample brought in by Mr. Tippett. From the general opinion expressed among them we will not harvest over one fourth of a crop this year.

We predicted such a disaster as this last winter and the farmers now are through making cotton in this section until the boll weevil can be destroyed. The weevil is here like he was in Texas the last year before they cut out cotton and starved him to death. No successful means of poisoning the weevil has ever been discovered and probably never will be, because he does not eat the leaves nor forms, but gets his living by sucking the uice from the inside of the plant, and poison put on the outside can not effect him.

Do away with cotton for two seasons and the weevil will vanish and that's the only way they oculd dispose of him in Texas.

Mr. V. J. Elmore left Monday for Baltimore, New York and other large eastern cities to lay in a supply stock of select merchandise for his large and growing trade.

DESTROYS THE BIRDS

Right at this time the law makers of Alabama are striving to tighten up on the game law and to arrange some real protection for the birds of the state.

Now comes the information from quite a number of farmers, who have been trying to poison boll weevils this year, that the lead arsenate put out by them against the boll weevils has resulted in killing more birds than weevils.

They say the poison does not seem to be very effective as regards the weevils, but that the birds are killed on every hand.

This is to be regretted, for, according to our information, some of the best quail territory in the county lies in sections where the most poison has been used and, in consequence, the destruction of game birds has been most severe.

It is a great pity to lose the cotton crop and the quail crop too.

YOU DON'T KNOW

When you feel disposed to criticize your editor for a short coming in news matter and you get it in to your head that he has no problems to solve except the gathering together of news and gossip, let us ask you to remember that the editor has a great deal more trouble in knowing just what to keep out of the paper than he does in gathering up the data. If he was to take off the muzzle and let his news items flow as they come in, he would either be killed and burned or hung for murder before he issued more than two papers.

The art of correct discrimination and a familiarity with the peculiarities of human nature are two of the most essential things a newspaper has to learn and he has to learn them quick if he stays in the game very long.

Knowing what NOT to print is a fine art.

LAMAR JEFFERS PASSES IN THE THRONG

Congressman Lamar Jeffers of the Fourth Alabama District, ran into Montgomery from Anniston Tuesday morning and was out again early in the afternoon. The occasion of Congressman Jeffers' visit was the annual convention of the Alabama Federation of Rural Mail Carriers before which he spoke Tuesday mornnig. The Congressman does not lay claim to being a spellbinder of the particularly flowery variety, but he was particularly the opposite in his speech to the knights of the mail pouch.

Addressing the convention, Congressman Jeffers assumed the style of a lecturer, and went into a discussion of the technique of congress in passing a measure. He explained how a bill was handled in the committee and how its treatment changed on the floor of the house or senate. The congressman also told the members of the federation what method to pursue when seeking legislation. As one of the latter said, he was sorter exposing the secrets of the law making body at Washington—Advertiser.

SHOULTS NEWS

Hurrah! Cotton picking time is here once again, tho from the looks it wont last very long this time.

Mr. Brady McAfee and Miss Eva Seals were happily united in the holy bonds of matrimony on last Tuesday evening, September 4. The groom is a prominent young man of this community while his young bride is an accomplished daughter of Mr and Mrs. Rufe Seals of Maplesville. Their many friends are wishing them a long life of happiness through the journey of life.

Mrs. W. M. Oden had as her guest last Saturday and Sunday, Mrs. Ed Weldon and daughter Mrs. John Cox of Billingsley.

Mrs. Eslie Lea Kelley is visiting relatives here this week.

Many from here attended the show at Maplesville last Saturday and seemed to enjoy it fine.

Miss Daisy Latham of Maplesville, and Mr. Fred Oden were dinner guests of Mr and Mrs Silas Oden on last Sunday.

WILL HE SELL?

As a prospective candidate for president Henry Ford must have assumed formidable proportions in the minds of the republican party.

President Coolidge and Secretary Weeks had him over at Washington last week and put it up to him pretty straight that if he would stay out of the race they would arrange for him to take over the Muscle Shoals property and go to work at town building.

Henry did not give them a definate answer at the time but took the matter under advisement. Now, if he really wants to develope that great water power we will soon know it.

One thing they did do that should have been attended to long ago. They told him plainly that the government had no power to either give, sell or lease the Gorgas plant, for the reason that it was a private investment of the Alabama Power Company, years before the war, and the holdings of the government there were only put in for war purposes and under an agreement with the Power Company that, after the war, they would either remove them or sell them to the Power Company at a price to be settled by a rigid computing of the cost in normal times.

We have known this fact all the time and have wondered, many a time, why the "Big Dailies" did not put the public wise from the first.

We have maintained from the first that unless Mr. Ford would agree to eliminate the Gorgas plant from his bid that he had no possible chance to ever get Muscle Shoals.

We are glad that the government has, at last seen fit to come clean on this much misunderstood proposition.

LONG JOURNEY TOGETHER

At eleven o'clock last Friday Mr Hugh Hodge and his estimable wife passed the forty-ninth mile post in the happ journey [illegible] man and wife

Forty-nine years ago they were married in Arkansas, and their wedding tour consisted of a 75 mile ride o Texas ponies to the nearest railroad

They came to Alabama to visit h relatives, intending to return west to make their home, but finances were a little low, after their journey to Alabama, so the happy groom got a job and went to work. Success must have crowned his labors, for today, 49 years after those happy days, when they lived in a cabin and cooked on the fire place, they are still with us, [illegible] peace and happiness and perfectly content, as life's sun dips towards the sunset, to live out their [illegible] [illegible] friend [illegible] Here is wishing for them [illegible] happy returns of this anniversary

A BIG DEAL

We learn, on good authority that Mr. W. A. Reynolds has closed out his entire milling interests in and around Tuskegee.

Mr. Reynolds was a large investor over there and we would judge that this is one of the largest financial deals that has been pulled off in this section for quite awhile.

Messers M. Barnette and R. M. Pipes [illegible] Mason City, were in Sunday visiting Mr. H. T. Pipes and family. Mr. Pipes is from the "Blue grass State" and a relative of Mr. H. T. Pipes.

Getting Ready To Handle The Peak Load

The railroads, in the last six months, have placed in service 79,240 new freight cars and 1,998 new locomotives. They are awaiting delivery of 96,855 freight cars and 1,902 locomotives. They are endeavoring to get their equipment in the best possible condition for service by October 1st, in order to properly handle the peak load. By that time they expect to have 95% of all cars in good working order.

They have increased the number of locomotives in good order from 75% to 82%, and by October 1st expect to have 85%. They have increased their fuel stocks from 6,757,000 tons to 10,667,000 tons (equal to 58%) thus releasing over 86,800 coal cars that would have been needed later on for moving this fuel. To do this, the railroads are spending over a billion dollars this year to purchase equipment, construct new yards, terminals, tracks etc.

Do not hurt the railroads, and indirectly yourself, by advocating some of the [illegible] and restrictive measures that are now being proposed by those who do not know anything about railroading

Buick Four-wheel Brakes

Buick four-wheel brakes meet the demands of present-day traffic conditions by having power in reserve to insure a rapid, sure and reliable "stop".

Actual braking effectiveness is practically doubled by Buick four-wheel brakes. This is accomplished by slowing down the two front wheels. Each brake band has a three-quarter-wrap or grip on its brake drum rather than the half-wrap wrap in common practice.

The Buick four-wheel brakes are an integral part of the Buick front axle design. Their arrangement and operation is simple. The front brakes are coupled in relation to the rear so that when the brake pedal is operated more pressure is put on the rear brakes than on the front.

Buick four-wheel brakes [on all models] are one of many definite advances in motor car operation and maintenance that for 1924 Buicks have contributed to better mobile transportation.

Baby Ceased to Fret After He Had Teethina

"When my baby began to cut his teeth he was so fretful and feverish I couldn't do a thing with him. It took all my time to nurse him and I couldn't look after my housework," writes Mrs. Annie Reeves, Route 31, Roswell, Ga., "but as soon as I began giving him Teethina he stopped fretting and has given me little trouble since."

Teethina is far superior to soothing syrups and similar preparations for quieting a fretful child. It contains no opiates and is therefore perfectly harmless. Weak, sickly children thrive on it and doctors recommend it.

Teethina can be had at any drug store or send 30c to the Moffett Laboratories, Columbus, Ga., and receive a large package and a free copy of Moffett's Illustrated Baby Book.—(Advertisement.)

The Drama of the Sea.

Twenty-two days in an open boat on the ocean affords an experience not often equaled in the records of the sea. Perhaps an exposure of such length has not been recorded since 1884, when three members of the crew of the yacht Mignonette endured a memorable and tragic journey in an open boat for 24 days. The story of the Trevessa's crew, when set out in full—in which we hope may be included that of the boat still missing—will add one more to those true thrilling stories of the sea with which our annals are full. Defoe knew well that for the telling of a tale of the sea narratives of fact gave the best material. Captain Marryat could not surpass or equal Hakluyt, and Stevenson envied the experience which enabled Herman Melville to deal in real events.

Austrian Brush Turkeys.

The Australian brush turkey lays its eggs on the top of a mass of decaying vegetation, which it has piled up to a height of fifteen feet or so. The eggs are laid at a depth of five or six feet, and left to hatch themselves by the warmth generated by the decaying matter.

GOOD RESULTS IN BILIOUSNESS

Black-Draught Recommended by a Texas Lady, Who Describes Her Daughter's Interesting Case.

Paris, Tex.—"We have been using Black-Draught for seven years," says Mrs. M. B. Salter, of this town, who related the following description of how Black-Draught proved beneficial in the case of her daughter:

"Our oldest daughter would get very bilious; was 'naturally of a bilious temperament,' said the doctor. The medicines we tried seemed too strong and would leave her in a weakened condition and her stomach so upset.

"We began to look for a remedy that would correct this and not leave her so weak. Some one suggested Black-Draught. We tried it and the result was so good we never use anything else with her.

"We make a tea from Black-Draught and it certainly gives satisfaction. I, myself, use Black-Draught for headache and indigestion and colds, and recommend it to others. Am sure it has benefited us."

Biliousness has been relieved, in many thousands of cases, by the use of Thedford's Black-Draught. It is easy to take, and has none of the disagreeable after-effects of calomel and other mineral drugs. Black-Draught is purely vegetable. Try it. Sold everywhere. 25c a package.

DAIRY FACTS

Dairy Cows Respond to Good Feed and Treatment

A dairy cow will respond to good feeding and good treatment, perhaps better than any other farm animal. Each individual dairy cow should be a unit by herself. Unlike other farm animals, dairy cows cannot be efficiently fed in a feed lot, as the requirements for each cow may be different.

The best feed for dairy cows is an abundance of pasture grass when that is available. A good pasture provides a balanced ration. Some high-producing cows will require a little grain as a supplement to pasture.

During the time of the year when a good pasture is not available, a cow can be fed efficiently by providing:

1. An abundance of palatable feed.
2. A balanced ration.
3. Succulent feed.
4. A moderate temperature in barn.
5. Comfortable surroundings.

A dairy cow is fed for the following purposes:

1. For maintaining the body.
2. To supply material for milk.
3. For development of fetus.
4. For growth of animal, if immature.
5. At times to produce gain in weight.

Three general classes of food material are required for feeding cows:

1. Protein or nitrogenous material.
2. Carbohydrates and fat to supply heat and energy.
3. Ash or mineral matter.

A well-balanced dairy ration will contain the above food material in the proper proportions. In making up a feed for dairy cows, it is usually most convenient to balance the roughage and concentrates separately and then feed all the roughness each cow will eat and adjust the grain mixture to the amount of milk or butterfat produced by the cow.

A good general rule to use as a guide in feeding is to feed from one-fourth to one-half as much of a balanced grain mixture per day as the cow gives milk per day. Cows giving rich milk usually give less per day but need a little more grain in proportion of the milk.—A. C. Baer, Professor of Dairying, Oklahoma A. and M. College.

Summer Suggestions on Care of Dairy Utensils

It is more or less difficult to give adequate care to the dairy utensils during the summer months. This is due to the fact that hot scalding water or steam is more troublesome to obtain. Proper care of these utensils is important during the summer months due to the temperature which favors the multiplication of bacteria. In the production of high-grade milk it is necessary that all utensils be thoroughly cleaned, for if any organic matter is left in any of them, it is almost impossible to produce the desired quality of milk.

If the utensils are cleaned with water just as it comes from the well or tap, some bacteria will remain which will multiply very rapidly during the warm weather of the summer months. The utensils should be sterilized, and this is done by exposing them to live steam for several minutes. In the cleaning of tinware they should be first washed with cold water and then with hot water and a washing powder that is alkaline in nature. Ordinary soaps are not satisfactory in the cleaning of the utensils of the dairy. After the tinware has been thoroughly cleaned it should be sterilized. Sterilization is the most important factor in the production of high-grade milk. —B. W. Fairbanks, Associate Professor Animal Husbandry, Colorado Agricultural College.

Series of Experiments to Decide Value of Corn

Recently a series of experiments was run to decide the value of grinding corn. In these tests it was found that cornmeal produced 7 per cent more milk and 14 per cent more fat than ear corn. Where corn and cobmeal were compared with cornmeal it was found that the cornmeal was slightly in the lead, having a 2 per cent better production in butterfat. Even though the corn is extra cheap, the cows will give a better account of themselves to the tester if they are fed corn that has been ground.

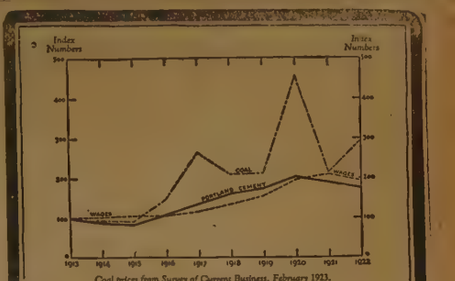
Regularity of Feeding Is of Much Importance

Regularity of feeding is of greater importance than time of feeding, in the care of dairy cows. The dairy cow should have regular meal hours. More roughage will be consumed if it is fed two or three times a day instead of only once.

Feeding of Minerals to Cows Is Not Profitable

Feeding of mineral mixtures to dairy cows did not show profit in pounds of milk produced at the Ohio station, where it was carefully tried out.

To supply minerals to dairy cows in forms that can best be used is by feeding legume roughage, such as alfalfa hay, clover and soy bean hay, rich in minerals and nitrogen. This applies both in raising young animals and feeding for milk production.



Coal prices from Survey of Current Business, February 1923. Cement prices from U. S. Geological Survey. Wages, from November (1922) Monthly Labor Review, Bureau of Labor Statistics.

More for Your Money

Swapping things—as when our grandmothers traded eggs for calico at the cross-roads store—gives a better understanding of values. By measuring one thing against another we too can often judge values more clearly.

Coal and wages make up more than half the manufacturing cost of cement.

The chart above shows price fluctuations for portland cement, coal and wages during the past ten years. In each case 100 is used to represent 1913 figures, by the Government departments which compiled these statistics.

Translated into "eggs and calico" language, this chart shows that a ton of coal would buy nearly twice as much cement in 1922 as in 1913. A day's wages also would buy more cement in 1922 than in 1913.

This means that even though coal and wages make up more than half its manufacturing cost, cement is now relatively lower in price than either coal or wages.

So, considering these increased costs, it is plain that in buying cement you get more for your money than before.

The Real Reason.

It was summer-time, and the master had been entertaining the boys in his own garden and feeding them with generous supplies of strawberries and cream.

"Have you enjoyed your strawberry feast?" he asked as they were leaving.

"Oh, yes, sir!" came the reply.

"Then," asked the master, seeking a point a moral, "if you had slipped into my garden and picked those strawberries without my leave would they have tasted as good?"

"No, sir."

"Why not?" he asked.

"Because," said one small urchin, with an air of conscious virtue, "we shouldn't have had any sugar or cream with them."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Japanese Disaster Probably Is Unequaled in Loss of Life and Property.

TOKYO, YOKOHAMA, IN RUINS

America Leads in Relief for the Stricken Nation—British Fleet Ready to Back League of Nations Against Italy—Ruhr Passive Resistance Collapses.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

HISTORY does not record a disaster equaling that which has overtaken Japan, unless present reports and estimates are greatly exaggerated. Shaken to pieces by violent earthquakes and set ablaze by resulting conflagrations, Tokyo, the capital, is three-fourths destroyed; Yokohama, the chief seaport, is wiped out; numerous smaller cities and towns are in ruins, and the entire eastern half of Hondo, Japan's main island, is devastated.

Latest estimates of the casualties, received by the Japanese legation in Peking, put the dead at 300,000 or more, of whom 100,000 perished in Yokohama. More than a million persons are homeless, and the hunger and suffering in the afflicted region are intense. It is not yet possible to estimate the monetary losses, but those in Tokyo alone are put at about $10,000,000,000.

Many Americans and other foreigners—officials, business men and tourists—were caught in the disaster, and of course some of them were killed. However, the number of American fatalities was rather small. Among them were Consul Max D. Kirjassoff and Mrs. Kirjassoff, Vice Consul Paul E. Jenks at Yokohama, and Commissioner and Mrs. William Eadie in command of the Salvation Army forces in Tokyo. The Japanese emperor and the prince regent escaped death but several members of the royal family and of the nobility were killed.

United States Ambassador Cyrus E. Woods notified Washington Tuesday that he, Mrs. Woods and the entire personnel of the embassy were uninjured, but that the embassy buildings were destroyed.

It will be many days before complete details of the disaster are received, for one feeble radio station has been the sole means of communication between Tokyo and the outside world. It is known that the temblors, which continued several hours on September 1, not only shook down innumerable buildings, but also broke all the water and gas mains, and that fires started simultaneously all over the cities and raged for days. Bridges upon which thousands of refugees had gathered collapsed, and other thousands were trapped by flames in the parks, and there perished. Tremendous tidal waves followed the earthquakes and swept over the water fronts, and many vessels went down. It is reported that a considerable part of the Japanese navy was thus destroyed. The better residence section of Tokyo probably was saved, but Yokohama simply no longer exists. The entire city was burned to the ground, and the corpses lay piled in the streets. Kobe has become Japan's chief seaport, and will remain such for a long time. Along the eastern edge of the island the coast line is altered and the bottom of the sea has risen.

NO SOONER had the first reports of the catastrophe been received than steps for the quick relief of the stricken Japanese were taken in all civilized lands. Out of its great abundance the United States took the lead in this work of mercy, inspired by the prompt proclamation of President Coolidge and the equally prompt measures of our navy, army and state officials. Within a few hours flotillas of transports and destroyers laden with food and medical supplies, doctors and nurses, were steaming toward Japan from Manila and Chinese waters; all shipping board vessels in that part of the world were ordered to co-operate, and Admiral Anderson, in command of the Pacific fleet, hastened to Yokohama on his flagship the Huron and took temporary charge of the relief work. Later Brig. Gen. F. R. McCoy was made director general of American relief.

President Coolidge directed the State, War and Navy departments to "go the limit" in extending aid, and he announced that this was the business of first importance before the government. In accordance with the recommendation in his proclamation, contributions from municipalities, organizations and individuals are being sent to the American Red Cross, which has offered all its resources to the Japanese government. The Red Cross has called on the American people to give $5,000,000. The Salvation Army is undertaking to raise a like sum, and it got busy promptly in Japan, where it has a large number of stations and workers.

Along our Pacific coast, where the Japanese have not been popular, racial antagonism was forgotten. San Francisco, remembering the assistance given by the Japanese when the city was destroyed by quake and fire in 1906, was swift and generous in response to the call for relief. The Rice Growers' Association of California held practically the entire available supply of rice in the state for Japanese relief and its head announced there would be no advance in price and none would be sold to brokers. All the available tar and cedar lumber on the northwest coast also is held to supply the Japanese demands for rebuilding and shipping men said most of the freight steamers on the Pacific would be pressed into service to handle the lumber traffic. Forty-five million feet of the lumber is to be donated by the mills.

Some Japanese authorities, dismayed and discouraged, said their country had been set back a full generation; but the more optimistic assert that its recovery will be comparable to its emergence from obscurity into a first-class world power within a century. This view is taken by Baron Watanaba of Osaka, prominent financier and president of fifteen of the largest public utility corporations in Japan. Interviewed in New York, he said he thought the reports of material loss had been exaggerated and that the total damage might not exceed three billion dollars. He believes reconstruction in Tokyo and Yokohama cannot be accomplished in less than three years, and continued:

"The Japanese government has sufficient funds to undertake this by itself. In all probability an appeal will be made for internal loans, followed by external loans. There is no doubt that American capital and brains will be asked to assist in rebuilding the stricken area. It is too formidable a task for Japan to tackle single handed."

PREMIER MUSSOLINI one day last week declared to his cabinet, and to the world, that if the League of Nations insisted on considering and deciding the Italo-Greek embroglio, Italy would withdraw from the league and refuse to recognize its decision. He also asserted the seizure of Corfu was not a war measure, but that the Greek island would be held until Italy's demands had been satisfied. However, Greece's appeal to the league was taken up by the council in Geneva, and Signor Salandra, the Italian delegate, read a statement from Rome that indicated Mussolini was cooling down considerably. It was merely that "the Italian government irrevocably expresses the opinion that the council should not proceed to take the action requested by Greece."

The general belief was that the French and British representatives had induced the Fascist premier to go slow. The council, however, postponed action on the matter until the council of ambassadors should decide what it could do, and the latter body also delayed, pending further accord between London and Paris. Lord Robert Cecil is insistent that the league shall handle the affair, and it was said in London that the government had determined to back up the league with all the power of the British fleet, acting as the league's fleet, which might mean forcibly ejecting the Italians from Corfu. The British view is that the council of ambassadors is competent to deal with the murder of General Tellini and his staff but that the League of Nations is the only proper body to deal with the seizure of Corfu. Greece takes the same position and has offered to post a sufficient sum to cover whatever indemnities shall be fixed by the ambassadors. Italy has presented to Greece a formal claim for 20,000,000 lire for the cost of the military occupation of Corfu, Paxos and Antipaxos.

PASSIVE resistance in the Ruhr is admittedly at its last gasp, and the German government is moving toward an agreement with France which shall make possible the restoration of commercial relations and the resumption of negotiations concerning reparations payments. Chancellor Stresseman is acting with caution for his position is precarious, but he does not pretend that passive resistance has not collapsed, and he practically has paved the way to its abandonment. This may not be a formal abandonment by the government, for it is already going on in the Ruhr, where the workers and the other inhabitants find they have reached the limit. Stresemann says that only a Franco-German industrial union will solve the reparations problem, and France, it is said, recognizes that an economic accord with Germany is indispensable and will be the best form of guarantee against German aggression. For the present the negotiations for such an agreement are limited to private conversations between the German and French industrialist magnates.

Berlin was startled Wednesday by the statement that the chancellor had decided on the arrest and prosecution of Dr. Andreas Hermes, finance minister under Cuno, on a charge of manipulating a huge financial swindle. It was believed the case would involve Hugo Stinnes.

GOVERNOR PINCHOT was still working hard last week to bring about a settlement of the anthracite coal strike, and seemingly was making some progress. Each side was said to be moderating its demands in some degree. It seemed likely the operators would abandon their demand for arbitration, and that the miners would accept the 10 per cent wage increase for contract miners and would modify the check-off demand.

ONCE more the soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic, survivors of the Civil war, have met in annual reunion, this time in Milwaukee where on Wednesday some ten thousand of them trudged bravely if haltingly in parade between solid walls of cheering, weeping spectators. Not one of these marchers was less than seventy years of age and many were forced to drop out of the line of march.

Gaylord M. Saltzgaber of Van Wert, O., was elected commander in chief.

The Woman's Relief corps also held its yearly meeting, and Mrs. Belle W. Biles of Baraboo, Wis., was elected president.

All service experts who witnessed the trial flight of ZR-1, the navy's new rigid dirigible, at Lakehurst, N. J., expressed great satisfaction with the test. The dirigible will be taken to St. Louis for the international air races October 1 to 3.

PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER HAYNES asks for an appropriation of ten million dollars for federal work in enforcing the dry law, an increase of one million over last year. If he gets this sum, he plans an increase in the number of field agents and in the Washington and field headquarters staffs. Mr. Haynes had a long conference with President Coolidge the other day and it was stated the President was inclined to call a convention in Washington of governors to devise means for federal and state co-operation in the enforcement of the prohibition law.

Graduate Nurse Finds "The Perfect Remedy"

"From my long experience as a professional nurse, I do not hesitate to say Tanlac is nature's most perfect remedy," is the far-reaching statement given out for publication, recently, by Mrs. I. A. Borden, 425 Pontius Ave., Seattle, Wash., a graduate of the National Temperance Hospital, Chicago.

"I have used Tanlac exclusively for seven years in the treatment of my charity patients," said Mrs. Borden, "and my experience has been that for keeping the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels functioning properly, and for toning up the system in general, it has no equal.

"About a year ago I had a lady patient who could not keep a thing on her stomach, not even water. I prevailed on her to try Tanlac and after the sixth bottle she could eat absolutely anything she wanted without the slightest bad after-effects.

"I had another patient who simply could not eat. I got him started on Tanlac and by the time he finished three bottles he was eating ravenously and able to work.

"These two instances are typical of the wonderful merits of the medicine. My confidence in Tanlac is unlimited."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists.

The Proper Use of Words.

Mother, who had been out the greater part of a rainy morning, came in with damp skirts and dripping umbrella and said to Urmil, three years old, standing in the hall:

"The day is so inclement it's no pleasure to be out."

Some time that afternoon, Urmil, whose curly locks had been twisted and pinned in a knot on top of her head by mother, approached the latter and said:

TRIP OUT WEST

The Big Thompson, like most of there mountains streams, is an impetuous little thing from the time its head waters first gush out of an ice fringed lake, a snow drift, or ice cave under a glacier hidden deep down in some mountain gorge, until its waters finally break through the last foot hills of the Rockies and plunge into the earth through a kind of cataract, of which I shall presently tell you something else. Down, down its waters come leaping and foaming from the sides of the snow mantled peaks and ice filled valleys twenty-tive or thirty miles away. They glide into a little mountain lake; are held back for a rush; ever falling, falling, falling, until all of its head waters have united to form one majestic stream and a beautiful cascade twenty-five miles long stretches along our road through the entire length of the Big Thompson Canyon.

And, where the cascade reaches the last foot hill and just before the Big Thompson stretches out in a gentle sparkling stream babling over a sand and gravel bed and lending its waters to hundreds of acres of beautiful level irrigated lands, a most singular thing happens to it. The beauty of the stream at this place is so great that one feels God has here placed his mighty hand upon the mountain side and the waters of the Big Thompson has glided into his finger prints. Standing upon the very brink of the cavern that has swallowed up this river, you are at once over come,—intoxicated—by the grandeur before you. You no longer behold boiling seething waters as you have done through out the length of the canyon as you travel up the cascade river. Down in the cavern beneath your feet the river has whipped itself into foam and mist. Huge blocks of granite just up here and there, their knife like points and edges splitting the water into shreds and throwing its particles and a billow of rainbows,—green, purple, and orange,—roll down the cataract, rising and falling and seeming to float away on an enchanted breeze. The eye is confused by the magnificence and grandeur before it: the ear no longer detects the sound of falling waters: the breath of invisible spirits seem to hover over you and lull and soothe your senses into a sweet forgetfulness; ones soul is overwhelmed and awed by the confusion of sight and sound that inwrap it.

It was at these falls and through the Big Thompson Canyon we entered the Rocky Mountain foot hills. An iron bridge with each end resting on a solid granite abutment hewn out of the mountain side, spans the Big Thompson just above the falls. A splendid road enters the mountain here: Its wide smooth graveled surface permits two cars to pass by each other nearly any where they may meet through out its entire length. The road bed is partly built up from the channel of the stream and partly hewn out of the canyon walls. It winds around just as the river does, but this is one of the straightest stretches of road that we found any where in the mountains. The Big Thompson in cutting through these foot hills wasted but little time in doing it. It took very nearly an air line from the back bone of the Rockies to the plains of Colorado. And, too, you could convince yourself that you were traveling up an almost level stretch of road if it were not for the fact that the Big Thompson is always dashing down beside you with such fury if you stepped into its waters your feet would go out from under you and you would find yourself tumbling down stream at a rate a little alarming. Then, again, you find it somewhat troublesome to keep your engine in high. It begins to boil and you get down to second gear and, perhaps, to low. It still sings along and you begin to swear that it is all shot to pieces and needs working over. You wonder how much more of the road there is and what it going to become of you. To ease your mind, you resort to your traveling map and find that in the stretch of this canyon you must climb from an elevation of something over 4000 feet to an elevation of something over 9000 feet, or at least that is what we had to do on our first days drive in. A 5000 foot grade, even though it was stretched out over something like thirty-five miles, gave us a very thorough introduction to automobile mountain climbing the first day we drove in.

In another letter, I will tell you about the Boy Scouts at the Ranger Camp in Bartholdf Park where we spent Sunday night of our first day in the mountains. On all sides of their camp are beaver dams. Deer may be seen walking the borders of the camp by moon-light; and during the day, the boys tell me they often see them on the side of the mountains.

TWO FINE LECTURES

Last Saturday forenoon quite a large audience assembled in the Court House to listen to a lecture by Mr. O. C. Dobbs, the National Lecturer for the C. F. of A. The speaker is absolute master of his subject and handled it in such a clear and consise manner that every one present could not fail to obtain a full and comprehensive idea of the aims and possibilities of that great organization.

His plea for universal cooperation of all class of business endeavors and was beyond any question, forceful, logical and practical. The entire system of economic success for the whole southland was embraced in his perfectly feazeable plans for general business relations.

He is unqualifiedly the man for his job. He is a fluent speaker and a logical reasoner, and you can not listen to him without learning something practical about the many errors under which we have labored for years and the simple remedies for their amelioration.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Dobbs lectured agan at the Court house to a good audience and his subject was "The Bible."

Here again he demonstrated his versatility as an orator and public speaker of note.

The subject is a vast one, by a process of elimination that was new to us, he condensed all of the essentials into the New Testament and so his remarks found their scope from Matthew to Revalations.

Here again he was familiar with his subject and made some wonderfully forceful points. He is orthodox in his belief and absolutely fair in his arguments and held his audience almost spell bound to the close.

DELICATESSEN HEADLIGHT

If activity and plans mean anything then surely the nuptial event of next Tuesday, September 25, 8:00 p. m. at the Community Building, will be the most effete social happening of the year. Quite a number of Cotton-picking parties at which Calcy Arsenate was served as refreshments, have been tendered the beautiful bride to be, which but further the interest of those parties concerned in the wedding of Stptember 25, at Verbena.

The bride has been unusually busy during the past several days entering upon the various social rounds and attending to little affairs concerning her trousseau. The Groom, Mr. Archibald Hercules Headlight has been feverishly busy gathering his crop in order that there will be no delay in the happy couple starting on their honey moon. Present plans are that they will go to the quiet and attractive woodland retreat Marbury immediately following the ceremony.

The following attendants announced for the wedding: [illegible] honor, Delicia Deepfount; best man, Goliath Little; Bridesmaids, Ima Fraid and Stilla Water; groomsmen; Heza Baer, Hazzy Gone; flower girl, May Weed; ring bearer, Watchim Droppit minister, I. M. Light. A chorus has been arranged for the musical feature and from the list of those understood to compose it the general opinion is that the effect on the assembly will be terrible.

There are no cards in town. It is expected that pink and yellow posters will be issued over the neighboring towns as a means of securing the cooperation of the general public in seeing this affair well done. There will be an admission fee charged at the door and the funds derived from such will be used in school improvement work.

The general public is invited. It is hoped that the community building in Verbena will on that occasion be packed. And for the information of the out of town guests, we will say that the building in just south of the bank. Be sure and come and bring your friends.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

The Value of Land Abstracts

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages, judgements, or other liens affecting the title, which an abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an abstract of title, be furnished A few dollars spent for an abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

LITTLE CONVENIENCES IN KITCHEN

Comfortable Arrangement of Sink, Drain Boards and Cold-Food Storage.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A visit to seventy-seven kitchens often suggests many conveniences not previously considered. Several excellent and economical plans for planning new or remodeling old kitchens, as well as numerous suggestions for a farm home in Wythe county, Virginia, have received special mention in a kitchen improvement contest started with the help of extension agents, co-operatively directed by the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Various Conveniences.

Outstanding among the conveniences are the double drain board of the sink, the hanging soap basket, the excellent light from two windows, and for use after dark, the electric light on a cord with a good-sized reflector. The substantial, compact, homemade towel rack which permits one to reach every towel is another good feature; also the handy hook for the dishpan, the covered garbage pail operated by foot pressure, and the large pitcher ready to pour boiling hot rinsing water over the dishes as they are washed. The cold closet should be especially noted. It is made flush with the wall of the kitchen, into which it opens. On the outside of the house it may be seen projecting out about 12 inches, finished with clapboards like the house, and having a ventilated bottom. This is a convenient substitute for the ordinary window box which frequently shuts off light and air and is not always easy to open with one hand if a dish is held in the other ready to put away.

MAKE FRUIT BUTTERS WHEN YIELD IS GOOD

Recipes Given Have Been Tested by Specialists.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There is no better way to use good apples and the sound parts of windfalls and wormy and bruised apples than to make them into butter. Pears and plums also make good butter, and peach butter is unusually appetizing. While apple butter is usually made with cider, using gallon for gallon of peeled and sliced apples and cider, it may be made with water only, or with other flavors. The following recipes have been tested by the United States Department of Agriculture and are recommended.

Apple Butter With Grape Juice.

To each gallon of peeled and sliced apples, cooked into a thin apple sauce and strained, add one pint of grape juice, one cupful of brown sugar and one-quarter teaspoonful of salt. Cook slowly and stir often for two hours, or until of the desired thickness; then stir in one teaspoonful of cinnamon.

Apple Butter With Lemons.

Slice four lemons, cover with water and let stand over night. Next morning put them in a preserving kettle with eight pounds of apples, pared, cored and sliced. Cook for one hour; add three pounds of sugar and cook slowly, with frequent stirring, one and one-half hours longer, or until of the proper thickness.

Apple Butter With Plums.

An exceedingly rich and snappy butter is made with apples and plums. Use one measure of plums to two measures of peeled and sliced apples. Wash and cook the plums and rub through a strainer or colander to get out the pits. Cook the apples into sauce, add the stewed plums and continue cooking an hour or two until of the right consistency. When two-thirds cooked, add two pounds of sugar per gallon. When finished, used spices and vanilla according to taste. A good proportion is one-half teaspoonful each of ground cinnamon, cloves and allspice, and from two to four teaspoonfuls of vanilla per gallon.

Pear Butter.

Pear butter is made like apple butter without the cider. Use pears ripe enough to cook up well. Peel, core and slice them; put in a preserving kettle with a little water and cook slowly until soft. Then add the sugar, one cupful to one quart of sliced pears, and continue cooking very slowly, with frequent stirring, for one and a half to two hours. The butter should then be smooth and of the consistency of thick apple sauce. Stir into the hot butter a little lemon juice, with cinnamon, ginger, or other spices to taste. Pack while hot in hot sterilized containers and cover with paraffin, or process in a hot water bath in sealed containers ten to twenty minutes.

Peach Butter.

Put the peaches in a wire basket and dip them in boiling water a few seconds, or until the skin slips. Dip them in cold water, peel them and pit them. Well-ripened freestone varieties are best. Mash the pulp and cook it in its own juice, without adding water. If it is rather coarse it may be put through a sieve. To each measure or pound of pulp add a half-measure or half-pound of sugar, cook slowly and stir frequently until the product is of the desired thickness. The sugar may be added before cooking begins, if desired. The meats of several pits may be cooked, either whole or sliced, in each gallon of butter. While still hot, pack in sterilized jars or glasses and process 20 minutes in a hot water bath or cover with hot paraffin.

Plum Butter.

Wash the plums and cook till soft with a little water. Rub the pulp through a coarse wire sieve. For each measure of pulp use half to three-quarters of a measure of sugar and cook slowly, with frequent stirring, until the butter is as thick as desired. If a tart butter is favored, less sugar should be used. If the plums are very juicy the pulp put through the colander may need to be boiled down and thickened before the sugar is measured or added. Cinnamon, allspice and cloves should be added to suit the taste, when the cooking is finished. Plum butter should be packed while hot in the same way as other butters or preserves.

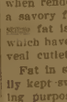
METHOD OF CLARIFYING FAT

Melt With at Least an Equal Volume of Water and Heat for Short Time.

An old-fashioned method of clarifying fat from the soup kettle or from cooked meats such as bacon, ham, chicken, beef, sausage, and other sources, is recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture. Melt the fat with at least an equal volume of water and heat for a short time at a moderate temperature, stirring the mixture occasionally. When cold, remove the cake of fat and scrape off any small particles of meat and skin that adhere.

Some fats are better flavored than others for use in pastry or cake making, but all cleanly rendered fats may be used in frying. If the flavor or color or both are not satisfactory at the first rendering, the process may be repeated several times. Another method, often recommended, is to cook a number of slices of raw potato in the boiling fat. The addition of a small uncut onion, a few leaves of summer savory and thyme, salt and pepper, when rendering meat drippings, makes a savory fat useful for gravies. Sausage fat is excellent for frying meats which have less flavor of their own, as veal cutlet or rabbit.

Fat in small quantities may be easily kept sweet in the ice box for cooking purposes. If lard is rendered at home in large quantities to last a long time it should be kept covered in tins or earthen jars, in a cool, dry place.



OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

An oilcloth apron is an excellent thing to wear when washing dishes.

* * *

It is best to roast a pan chicken with the breast down. It will be more juicy.

* * *

The lining of the eggshells will clear the coffee, without using the white of the egg.

* * *

A cloth-covered broom will readily wipe the dust from papered walls and ceilings.

* * *

A cake of paraffin added to the water in which clothes are boiled will make them white and clean. The paraffin should first be placed in the cold water and allowed to melt as the water heats

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 23

TIMOTHY A GOOD MINISTER OF CHRIST JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:1-3; Phil. 2:19-22; II Tim. 1:1-6; II Tim. 3:14-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."—I Tim. 4:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Boy Who Loved the Bible.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Timothy, Paul's Helper.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Timothy Trained to Serve.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Ministry as a Life Work.

I. Timothy's Parentage (Acts 16:1).

His father was a Greek and his mother a believing Jewess. On his mother's side at least, he had a godly ancestry. Usually the mother makes the son. Two generations of maternal pious grandmothers were back of Timothy. How thankful we ought to be to God for a godly ancestry. Christian heredity and training constitute the essential elements for a Christian life.

II. Timothy's Training (II Tim. 1:5; II Tim. 3:14-15).

His wise and faithful mother and grandmother carefully nurtured him in God's Word. He knew the Scriptures from his childhood through their training. The faith which came to him from his grandmother through his mother did not come through the laws of heredity, but through careful training and teaching. Grace is not reasoned by the laws of heredity. The factors involved in his training were godly ancestors, a Christian home, and a diligent study of the Scriptures.

III. Timothy's Call (Acts 16:1-3).

While on Paul's second missionary journey in company with Silas, Timothy was found at Lystra near Derbe. Perhaps he had been converted on Paul's first missionary journey, but hearing a favorable report of him by the brethren, Paul took and circumcised him so as not to offend the Jews, because his father was a Greek. This was not contrary to the decision of the Jerusalem council. It was a case where conciliation could be made without compromise of truth. From this time to the end of Paul's life, he and Timothy were boon companions. They were as a loving father and a dutiful son.

IV. Timothy's Character Reticent.

1. Of a Retiring Disposition. II Tim. 1:6. Timothy had received a gift from God at the hands of the apostle, but it needed to be stirred up, that is, fanned into a flame. Such a temperament would mature in touch with a great personality like Paul. It is highly important that everyone store up the gift which God has given unto him.

2. Courageous. II Timothy 2:1-8. Having been stirred up, he was freed from the spirit of fear and deliberately identified himself with Paul in his sufferings and trial. Courage is greatly needed in doing the Lord's work.

3. Faithful. He carried in the difficult field of Ephesus through many years. He was the only man of the needed fidelity to minister to the Philippians. (Philippians 2:20). The secret of his faithfulness in such a position was his fidelity to the Word of God.

V. Timothy's Ministry.

1. As a fellow-missionary with Paul. (Phil. 2:22).

2. As pastor of a church at Ephesus. Here he labored for many years tactfully meeting the difficulties of that great church. The Christian minister should believe in the Scriptures as God's Word and be able to rightly divide it so as to meet the needs of those who hear him. This is the only way to meet the difficulties that arise in the pastor's labors.

All Due to Christianity.

We live in the midst of blessings, till we are utterly insensible of their greatness, and of the source from which they flow. We speak of our civilization, our arts, our freedom, our laws, and forget entirely how large a share of all is due to Christianity. Blot Christianity out of the page of man's history, and what would his laws have been?—what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; there is not a familiar object round us which does not wear its mark, not a being or a thing which does not wear a different aspect, because the light of Christian hope is on it, not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity, not a custom which cannot be traced, in all its holy and healthful parts, to the Gospel.

Responsibilities.

Responsibilities gravitate to the person who can shoulder them and power flows to the man who knows how.—Hubbard.

Avoid Making Enemies.

Those whom you cannot make friends of, avoid making enemies.—Epicurus.

The Weak.

The weak may be joked out of anything but their weakness.—Zimmerman.

The PUBLIC PROTECTED

In a former advertisement we referred to provisions of the Alabama Public Utility Act, vesting the Public Service Commission with power and authority to supervise the activity of public utilities with respect to their construction and extension, their rates, regulations and returns, reserves for renewals, and the issuance and sale of stocks and bonds. Herein we refer to those provisions relating to service to the public, management and operation, and to the books, records, and accounts, of a utility.

Service to the Public

All service to the public must be the same and without discrimination. If any person, firm or corporation feels that any rate charged by a utility is "unfair, unreasonable, unjust or inadequate, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential, or constitutes unfair competition, or that the service is inadequate or cannot be obtained," the Commission is required upon complaint to make such investigation as it may deem necessary. (Sec. 28.) If the Commission finds the complaint well-founded it is required to make the proper changes in the rate or regulation complained of. (Secs. 29-31.)

Reduced Rates

Utilities may furnish service at reduced rates in certain instances, particularly to pupils attending schools and to sheriffs, employees of police and fire departments, etc. (Sec. 48.)

Service Standards and Meter Accuracy

The Commission has authority to prescribe regulations for the examination and testing of gas, light, and other services, and for the testing of meters in the presence of any complainant is desired. (Secs. 35-8.)

Inspection and Supervision Fees

Each utility is required to pay into the state treasury a supervision fee ranging from $25.00 to $3,000.000 per annum, based on its gross receipts, to cover the cost incurred by the Commission in inspecting and supervising the management and operation of the utility. (Sec. 19.)

Management and Operation of Utilities

The Commission shall inquire into the manner and method in which utilities are managed and operated and may obtain from any utility all necessary information to enable the Commission to perform its duties. (Sec. 46.)

Reports by Utilities

Every utility must make an annual report of its gross receipts. (Sec. 20.) Any utility failing to make such report is subject to a fine of not exceeding $50.00 per day. (Sec. 70.) At other times the utility shall make such reports to the Commission and furnish it with such other information as the Commission may desire. (Sec. 42.)

Commission's Records Public

All reports, records and accounts in the possession of the Commission shall be open to inspection by the public. (Sec. 65.)

Books, Records and Accounts

The Commission has power and authority at any reasonable time to examine the books, records, accounts and documents of a utility (Sec. 47); to require their production at any reasonable time and place for examination by the Commission or any person employed by the Commission (Sec. 34); and to establish a uniform system of accounts and require the same to be kept in this state by the utility. (Secs. 39-40.)

Hearings Reported

All hearings before the Commission shall be reported by an official stenographer and copy of the transcript of such hearing furnished to any party upon paying for same. (Sec. 67.)

Penalties

The Commission may prosecute suits for the enforcement of penalties or forfeitures imposed upon any utility by this act. (Sec. 76.)

Rebates

Any person accepting or receiving rebates, concessions or discriminations shall be subject to prosecution and punishment by a fine of not more than $1,000. (Sec. 74.)

It will thus be seen that the Commission exercises a jurisdiction limited only by the constitution over practically every phase of public utility activity, from the beginning of construction through active service to the public, and even to the occasional termination of service.

Forestry Clubs Are Spreading.

Forestry clubs, formed by boys and girls, are becoming popular, according to records of the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture. Beginning with a forestry club organized last year in Crestone, Colo., the movement has spread to many other localities in that state. These clubs are being formed under the direction of local men and women interested in both forestry and agriculture in cooperation with the county agent and the forest service.

"Is the baby strong?"

"Well, rather. You know what a tremendous voice he has?"

"Yes."

"Well, he lifts that five or six times an hour."

Why They Remain Unmarried.

Dr. A. A. Brill of New York, in his study of 400 cases of patients who had been only or favorite children found that only 93 of them had married, though their average age was thirty-four, says a writer in McClure's Magazine. In his opinion most of them remained old maids and old bachelors because they were unduly dominated by their attachment to their parents.

Swedish Queen Founds Home.

Queen Victoria of Sweden has just begun the establishment of a rest cure for women as her investment of the $45,000 which she received on her sixtieth birthday, last year, as a gift subscribed by the women of her country, and her popularity has been enhanced more than ever by this act.

The site of the new rest cure, says a Stockholm paper, is the picturesque island of Oland, in the Baltic, just off the southwest coast of Sweden, where the queen's favorite summer villa "Solliden," is situated. She has purchased three houses, which will be reconstructed for the new institution.

Why English Drink Tea.

Traveler—I often wondered why the English were such tea hounds.

Friend—Yes.

"Yeah, but I know now. I had some of their coffee."

Ancient Walls of Tiberias.

Part of an ancient wall and columns belonging to the ancient city of Tiberias, on the Sea of Galilee, have been recently discovered. As soon as the ruins were discovered expert archeologists were summoned and the excavations will be carried out under scientific control. It was near this city that the Sermon on the Mount was preached and Mary Magdalene is believed to have come from a nearby town.

Her Opportunity.

Betty, aged four, was not allowed to go visiting alone. Seeing her one morning going from house to house spending but a few minutes at each, I asked her what she was doing.

"Well, mother's away and can't spank, so I fought I'd call on all the ladies."

Photographic Statuettes.

Recently introduced into this country from Europe is a very interesting method of making photographic statuettes. The subject is photographed in the usual way. The paper print is then cut out, following the exact outline of the figure. This is pasted on to a mahogany board 3-16-inch thick, which is cut away to match the photograph. When mounted on a small pedestal, this picture stands out in relief so that it looks like an actual statuette.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Italy Promises to Evacuate the Greek Island of Corfu on September 27.

FIUME DISPUTE DANGEROUS

Chancellor Stresemann's Plan to Mortgage All German Property—Relief Work for Japan—Spanish Army Revolts Against Government—American Destroyers Wrecked.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ITALY—which means Premier Mussolini—became more reasonable last week in the matter of the occupation of Corfu and the dispute with Greece. In the council of ambassadors Lord Crewe intimated that Great Britain could not permit the Italians to hold Corfu until Greece had executed all the terms and demands, including the arrest and punishment of the murderers of the Albanian boundary commissioners, and there were unofficial references to the British fleet, which was supposed to be concentrated at Malta. Baron Avezzana thereupon agreed reluctantly that Italy should evacuate Corfu on September 27, and the ambassadors accepted this promise.

Italy, however, insisted that if the assassins were not discovered by the international commission of inquiry and duly punished, Greece shall pay heavy indemnity, not to exceed the 50,000,000 lire she has deposited in a Swiss bank. If the murderers are found and punished, the payment to be exacted will be nominal. To this also the ambassadors agreed. Baron Avezzana said his government fully believed Greek officers were responsible for the crime and that the Athens government would do all it could to hide the criminals and save them from punishment.

Early in the week it seemed that the Italo-Greek row had been ended by the decision of the ambassadors, who imposed on Greece conditions almost identical with those in Mussolini's ultimatum. Both nations accepted these, but the quibbling that followed almost exhausted the patience of the League of Nations, and the little powers in the league saw in Italy's tactics a threat against their own future safety. Mussolini complained that Greece was doing nothing to find the murderers of the boundary commissioners. Thereupon Greece arrested a number of men and also, asserting that the real criminals were Albanians, called on Albania to capture them. Albania replied that the Albanian authorities would be pleased to cross over into Greece and arrest them if the Greek government was not able to do it.

OF ITALY'S two quarrels, that with Jugo-Slavia held the greater possibilities of expanding into actual hostilities. If it should result in warfare, however, Greece also might well be involved. M. Ninchich, head of the Jugo-Slavian delegation in Geneva, said he had not yet gone beyond the stage of negotiations. In Paris it was asserted that Italy was about to proclaim the annexation of Fiume and that Jugo-Slavia would make no serious protest provided Sussak and Porto Barros, adjacent towns, were not directly affected. Italian troops are concentrated at Trieste and the Italian navy is ready at Taranto. The Serbs are hurriedly reorganizing their army on French lines and are getting great quantities of ammunition from France purchased with part of their new French loan of 300,000,000 francs. Colonel Gonatas, head of the Greek government, says Italy is sending large quantities of arms and ammunition to Varna to equip the Bulgarians for war if Jugo-Slavia and Greece combine against Italy. Rumania and Czechoslovakia show indications of remaining neutral or siding with Rome.

AS MAY be supposed, the sessions of the League of Nations last week were not especially pleasant. Delegates of the lesser nations were impatient and dissatisfied, and representatives of the great powers, especially Lord Robert Cecil, were on the defensive. For several days, at the request of President De la Torriente, the Corfu and Fiume affairs were not openly discussed, and the league devoted itself to the Austrian situation, concerning which it could properly congratulate itself. But finally Hjalmar Branting of Sweden broke loose when the commission for disarmament was debating the proposed treaty of mutual guarantees. Declaring this to be a coercive instrument, he asserted the covenant already has shown itself to be rather fragile in practice, and he questioned the wisdom of taking steps toward more stringent measures when the league cannot enforce those it has. Other severe critics of the league's general policy and especially of the alleged failure of the great powers to live up to the covenant were Dr. Christian Lange of Norway and Prince Arfaed Dovleh of Persia.

SEIZING the opening presented, the Republican national committee last week issued a statement to show at length how the "failure" of the League of Nations to function in the Italo-Greek dispute has completely vindicated the opposition of the Republican party to American membership in the league and to American entanglement in any such European affairs. The committee made no direct mention of the world court.

CHANCELLOR STRESEMANN, in an address to a group of editors, made public his plan for reparations and settlement of the Ruhr problem. He said in part:

"According to the Versailles treaty, Germany's indebtedness is guaranteed by national property. What I propose concerns direct collaboration of private property and therefore goes beyond the Versailles treaty. Our calling upon private property in Germany creates realizable security, whereas the securities under the Versailles treaty cannot be cashed at present.

"If mortgages are inscribed as first mortgages on state and private property of the entire economic system of Germany in favor of the German state—to a certain percentage—these mortgages can be considered realizable and movable value—and brought into a trustee company in the administration of which reparations the creditor would participate. The interest on this mortgage would go to the trustee company, which would take up new loans after issuing obligations based on these mortgages and their interest. This would give France possession of big sums as well as turn the interest payments into cash in a set time.

"Such fulfillment certainly is not theoretical nor general guarantees, but real facts, free from ambiguity. This offer can place France in possession of payments, upon which all the conditions the French made for withdrawing from the Ruhr are fulfillable.

"In order to make it actual, it is required that the Ruhr again be under German control and the German sovereignty restored in the Rhineland. Our offer can bring a solution to the passive resistance if we are given a guarantee that after an agreement has been reached the Ruhr will be evacuated and the old rights restored in the Rhineland."

Herr Stresemann tacitly admitted Germany had lost out in the Ruhr but made no direct reference to the government's readiness to call off passive resistance.

France still insists that passive resistance must be officially ended, and also that evacuation of the Ruhr can only be effected in proportion to payments made.

JAPAN'S earthquake disaster has lost nothing in gravity or horror with the receipt of more complete details. Numbering the victims is still impossible, and probably always will be, but the total casualties are estimated by the Japanese home office at considerably over a million, and it is thought the deaths are more than 200,000. Having restored order quickly, the Japanese government is devoting itself to the vast work of relief and reconstruction, with the co-operation of the rest of the world, especially America. Our Red Cross relief fund is far over the $5,000,000 mark and increasing daily, for an immense sum will be needed. The organization, besides cabling $1,000,000 for immediate purchases in nearby markets, is buying and sending large quantities of supplies and clothing, and also corrugated iron and other building materials.

SPAIN'S internal troubles reached a climax last Thursday when the long threatened revolution began with the revolt of most of the army, led by the captain general of Barcelona, General Primo-Rivera. That officer declared a state of siege in the district, seized the communications and issued a proclamation declaring the army called on the sovereign to save Spain and asking the dismissal of the present ministers. Garrisons in other cities adhered to the military movement, which thereby assumed the importance of a real coup d'etat. The revolt is not directed against the king. The cabinet declared itself in permanent session and said it would abandon its position only under force.

"ONE of the most tragic epochs in American history relative to law enforcement" is what Attorney General Daugherty calls the 41 months that have elapsed since the enactment of the Volstead act, in a report submitted to President Coolidge concerning the work of the federal judiciary in enforcing prohibition. An official synopsis says the report "reveals, among other things, that the Department of Justice has been called upon to prosecute a member of the judiciary, prominent members of the American bar, high officials of the federal and state government, millionaires, scions of the nation's aristocracy—a sordid story of assassination, bribery and corruption that found its way into the very sanctums wherein the inviolability of the law was presumed to have been held sacred."

Part of the general lack of respect for the dry law may well be laid to the pettiness of many of the enforcement officers. For instance: Last week the British yacht Frontiersman, commanded by Roger Pocock and manned by members of the Adventurers' club of London, entered San Pedro harbor, California, in the course of her trip to find a round-the-world path for British aviators. Federal officers promptly raided the little vessel and seized its private store of liquors and attached the boat. That sort of thing only disgusts those who know the prevalence of bootlegging and moonshining by our own citizens.

ANTHRACITE operators and miners settled all their differences and signed a two-year agreement, and mining is about to be resumed. The pact gives the men a 10 per cent wage increase, the eight-hour day, collective bargaining and revision of wage rates and schedules. The workers gave up the check-off system of collecting union dues. As usual the public will pay for this, as anthracite coal will be advanced 75 cents or $1 a ton. That is, unless Governor Pinchot's plans to avert this are successful. He believes the interstate commerce commission should consider a new anthracite freight rate to help absorb the wage increase, and wants the federal coal commission to make public its findings on profits and costs of mine operations and in wholesale and retail distribution. He suggests the other governors join him in seeking methods to prevent the higher prices. President Coolidge has let it be known that he and the federal agencies will do all they can in this line, and when congress assembles the President will recommend such legislation as the coal commission sponsors.

ONE of the most serious disasters that ever befell the American navy was the wrecking of seven destroyers off Arguello light, 75 miles north of Santa Barbara, Cal. The vessels were traveling south in formation, at 20 knots, in a heavy sea and dense fog. They crashed on the rocks, and were a total loss. Twenty-three members of their crews lost their lives. The destroyers were of the latest models and cost, when put into service a few years ago, $500,000 apiece.

THE eclipse of the sun was a dismal failure, so far as the scientists were concerned. It came off according to schedule, as eclipses have a habit of doing, but the phenomenon was so obscured by clouds that all the photographs taken in the path of totality, at the southwest corner of the United States and in Mexico, are practically useless.

Alabama Mayor Out With Strong Facts

Judge G. W. Thomason, Mayor of Tarrant City, Alabama, widely known and highly esteemed pioneer citizen, recently gave his unqualified endorsement to the Tanlac treatment.

"Chronic indigestion brought me to the verge of a general breakdown three years ago," said Judge Thomason, "and nothing seemed to afford much relief. I was eating scarcely enough to keep going on and food stayed in my stomach like a rock, causing pain and extreme nervousness. Sleep was often impossible, and I gradually weakened so I could hardly attend to my office duties.

"The first bottle of Tanlac improved me wonderfully, and each successive bottle gave added impetus to my returning strength. I felt ten years younger when I finished the sixth bottle a short time later. Tanlac gave me new zest in life that still remains with me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists.

MANY WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

Through the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Two Interesting Cases

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Mrs. Edwards Avoids Operation

Wilson, N. C.—"For about a year I was not able to do anything, not even my housework, because of the pains in my sides and the bearing-down pains. I could only lie around the house. The doctor said nothing but an operation would help me, but I tried different medicines which did no good, until my sister insisted on my trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She said there was nothing like it. I know that she was right, for I began to improve with the first bottle and it has done me more good than anything else. I am able now to do anything on the farm or in my home and I recommend it to my friends."—LILLIE EDWARDS, R.F.D. 3, Box 44, Wilson, N. C.

Another Operation Avoided

Akron, Ohio.—"I can never praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I had such pains and weakness that the doctor told me nothing but an operation would help me. But my mother had taken the Vegetable Compound and she told me what it had done for her, and so I took it and I am glad to tell every one that it made me a strong woman, and I have had two children since then."—Mrs. R. G. WESTOVER, 325 Grant Street, Akron, Ohio.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contain valuable information.

Strange Experience.

One day a friend wanted to go swimming and asked me to keep $30 for him until he returned. I wrapped it in a handkerchief with $20 of my own money and pinned it inside my dress. An hour later I went to the post office and upon returning, saw something lying on the sidewalk. I picked it up and discovered it to be my handkerchief containing the $50. The pin had come unfastened, but I had not noticed it.—Chicago Journal.

This Little One Had Colic for Three Months

"My baby suffered from colic for three months and I was afraid I was going to lose her," writes Mrs. A. J. Tolbert, of Holley, Fla., "but soon got over it when I gave her Teethina, and now I will never be without it, for I give it to both my little ones and it keeps them well."

Colic is a very common complaint with babies and if not corrected in time often leads to more serious disturbances. Teethina corrects baby's indigestion, relieves distress due to an overloaded stomach, cleans out the bowels and regulates the system.

Teethina can be had at any drug store or send 30c to the Moffett Laboratories, Columbus, Ga., and receive a large package and a free copy of Moffett's Illustrated Baby Book.—(Advertisement.)

We hope every reader of this paper, who can possibly do so, will attend Sunday school next Sunday.

The cupidity of the human race is so great when a dollar rattles you never know what may happen.

The authracite coal strike is about settled. Governor Pinchot did the job but President Coolidge is putting on the bells.

We hope when the last trump is sounded that prohibition as a political issue will cease to exist. We have no hope short of that.

The fellow who is always looking for an easy job can usually be recognized by the patches in the seat of his pants.

In these cultured days even the mandate of the ballot box has ceased to mean anything. The people rarely ever get what they vote for.

The many friends of Col. L. F. Gerald will be glad to learn that he has returned from the hospital in Birmingham and seems to be his normal self again.

If President Obregon, of Mexico, can establish and maintain a safe and stable government over there, wealth will flow into his country in perfect rivers for the next decade.

Even "sweet charity" is being capitalized these days by promoters until, the first thing you know, the public purse strings will be mighty hard to [illegible].

[illegible] laws and game laws of Alabama should either be enforced or repealed. The ignoring of any law with impunity is an excuse for some people to ignore other laws.

The gubernational office of Alabama is still running true to form as a political graveyard. Both Brandon and McDonald are shaping a course towards private life for the future.

What is the use in keeping up a lot of talk about a wet plank and Al Smith in connection with the next national democratic convention? Neither of these dead issues will cut any figure at that meeting.

According to the action of our legislature this year Alabama neither needs nor wants any more industrial development. We must have been out of order in trying to get a cotton mill or two for Clanton.

We can remember our first experience in working 10 hours for a day. It looked to us like about the softest job we ever heard of. Now they are demanding 40 hour week with 60 [illegible].

Young man, if you would prosper and be able to rest when you grow old, don't think about how little you can do and get by, but how much you can do and how well you can do it.

[illegible] day so you are not ashamed to meet your mother nor your wife, nor afraid to meet the sheriff nor your God and you will sleep well, have a good health and stay here a long [illegible].

[illegible] of our friends have [illegible] on their paper lately. If you want to make the paper better and better that's the way to do it. Let us have your approval and it is a great incentive for us to do our best. Thank you all.

The State administration is calling on the legislature every day for more taxes and more money but they never say a word about cutting expenses. The business way to do it is to curtail your expenses and make them keep within your income.

Most of the democrats in Chilton county have decided to "come out of the crack" and let the world know who they are. We have a few left who are afraid to even breath hard for fear their republican friends will not approve of it. We feel like we can get along with out that class, however.

SOME PLAIN FACTS

The democratic party in Chilton county has kept its organization intact so far following the last election and have marched steadily forward in their program of winning the better element of our citizenship to a calm and dispassionate view of the actual situation and to a realization of the unfortunate losses we are destined to sustain as long as we persist in isolating ourselves, and trying to run counter to the traditions and sentiments of the great section in which we live.

One lone county has scant chance of making much progress or getting very far on the road of prosperity when it elects to willfully and needlessly allign itself against the sentiments of the vast areas that surround it. No person has ever been able to live strictly unto himself. The co-ordination of common interests is the power that has made our country great, and has made it possible for the experiment of self-government set up by our fore fathers, to have lived and prospered until today it is the master power in all the world, feared and envied by all the balance of mankind.

If the various states or units, of this great confederation had undertaken to each one live its own life, in its own way, independent and antagonistic to all of the others the inevitable result would have been the speedy wiping out of the whole bunch and a great and powerful land of freedom would still be only a dream in the bosoms of an oppressed people.

Cooperation in everything that succeeds is as necessary as air is to us if we live. Did you ever know a man or a set of men for that matter, who undertook to antagonize the community in which they lived? If you did you have known a man, or set of men who never prospered.

People are made interdependent. It is one of the immutable laws built into humanity by the Creator, that people must cooperate with and depend upon [illegible] if success is ever to crown their efforts. The Good Book tells us that we can not live unto ourselves, and all human history and all human endeavor has proven the truth of that assertion all the way down the ages.

The motto of our great country realizes the truth of the inexorable law, "United we stand, Divided we fall." Then how pitible is the condition of that man, or community, that undertakes to controvert the truth of this fundamental principle by alligning themselves against the overwhelming sentiment of their neighbors and friends, and sets up their puny efforts in an attempt to overthrow, or even stem the onward sweep of this sentiment. They can only hope for a [illegible] of ostracism that will effectually bar them from a participation in any of the benefits and emoluments that follow in the footsteps of a united spirit of cooperation.

We all know southern conditions and political sentiment. We certainly should all be able to see and realize that circumstances that will perpetuate this political sentiment for ages to come. Then how awfully unwise and disastrous is it for our county to go on through the years waging an absolutely impotent and utterly hopeless warfare against their friends and protectors, with no other possible result further than the holding in little insignificant county offices, a few local politicians, whose sphere of influence, instead of being a benefit to you abroad, is in actual liability and militates against your every effort in reaping the blessings that follow from a united spirit of cooperation.

The song rendered by the Clanton Quartette at the Baptist Sunday school last Sunday was simply too beautiful to tell about. The only objection we have to the Quartette is that we have them so seldom.

Howard Vinson, who lived in Clanton for several years in his early childhood days, is here visiting friends and relatives. He has been enjoying western life at Tulsa, Oklahoma for two or three years.

Messers W. S.Price and Ed Plier motored to Troy, Dothan, Ozark and other towns of South Alabama last Saturday, returning Sunday.

STILL NEEDING DWELLING HOUSES

There has been a constant building of new homes going on in Clanton for 18 months and still the demand for house room seems to be as great as ever.

There are quite a number in process of construction at the present and the outlook indicates that the building boom will continue indefinately. The demand right now for houses to rent is away in excess of the supply. More than a hundred new homes are now in evidence and still the daily inquiry is for a house for rent.

The population that rightfully belongs to Clanton now will go well beyond the 2000 figure and still the demand is for room for new citizens.

Clanton is no longer a cross roads village but is a rapid city and the sooner the citizens realize that fact and make their busin is arrangements accordingly the sooner will a real systematic service be possible with the city authorities.

We must all ecoperate with them in observing all traffic and sanitary laws, not as an act of accommodiation, but as a necessary aid in making our little city safe and healthful for all its citizens.

Do you get the idea?

SHERIFF LITTLEJOHN ON THE JOB

If you have any "Mountain Dew" on hand we would advise you to seal it up carefully and put it away to preserve as a curiosity.

The way Sheriff Littlejohn is carrying on there won't be a drop left the first thing you know.

He and his trusty deputy, Mr. Culp, made a little sortie up in the Stump Hill region the other day and captured a beautiful, new 80 gallon copper still that was a dandy. It was jam up to date and its owners were right in the act of setting it up for business when the sheriff arrivid. Four barrels of beer were poured out and the entire outfit destroyed.

Messers. B. Igo. Harley Smith, Jas. Aldridge and Cleve Dutton were the parties at the still and were arrested by the sheriff.

It looks like the rigid law enforcement put on by sheriff Littlejohn would convince the moonshiners and that they would quit rather than face certain arrest and punishment.

Prof Jno. M. Parrish was a pleasant caller at the News office Saturday. The Professor will open his school at Collins Chapel on time.

Mr. A Y. Williams, of Verbena, was among those we saw here Saturday enjoying the lecture at the courthouse in the intertst of farmers being organized.

Misses Elua Mae and Clara Vines were in Clanton last Saturday doing some shopping. They are daughters of Mr. J. L. Vines, a mimber of the County Board of Education and a man who has always contributed his part in helping to educate the people of Chilton.

The Railroads Do Not Need Quack Doctors

One thing characteristic of quack doctors is that they try to make well folks believe they are sick, and thus create a fictitious need for their poisonous pills among the self-deluded.

Certain quacks—shyster lawyers, pot-house politicians, and such ilk—are crying aloud that the railroads are sick and must have medicine in drastic doses.

The railroads are not sick—now. They are past the crisis of the wasting illness of the World War and Government control and are on the high road to recovery; getting free from the effects of the debilitating drugs that have been poured into their systems. They require only that Nature be allowed to take its course and that the patient be given enough time for full restoration to health and vigor.

Stop listening to the quacks. Give the railroads a chance. The prosperity of the country demands it.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

The Woman's Missionary Union of the Methodist Church Honor Memory of Mrs. W. W. Fox

Last Sunday the evening services of the Methodist church were taken over by the ladies of the Missionary Union, who devoted the hour to a beautiful and touching program as a memorial to the memory of the late Mrs. W. W. Fox.

Following is a brief outline of the various parts of the service, and we wish to say here that each member was beautifully executed and the entire service, taken as a whole, blended so perfectly together and was so touchingly appropriate for the occasion, that it reflected great credit upon the good women who planned and arranged it.

Mrs. McDavid was presiding officer and her direction of the affair spoke in highest terms of her skillfulness and dignity in filling that station.

Mrs. Elenor Roberts opened the services with a prayer replete with tenderness and devotion. She also presided most perfectly at the piano during the various musical numbers.

The memorial address was delivered by Mrs H. T. Chandler and was a master piece in its line and splendidly delivered.

The Resolutions offered upon this sad occasion by the Society, were clearly and distinctly read by Mrs. R. E. Luckie.

A beautiful solo was rendered in splendid voice and most artistic manner by Mrs. Jno. Armstrong. She is certainly one of the sweet singers of Clanton.

An address of eulogy was delivered by Mrs. Jim Jones that was a beautiful tribute to the memory of this good woman who has "crossed over the river and is now resting under the shade of the trees."

One of the most beautiful features of the occasion was a quartett sang by Messers Jesse Jones, Col. Percy Pitts, Miss Beverly Hester and Mrs. J. O. Middleton. This was, indeed, something to treasure in our memories of this sad service for the dead.

Mrs. C. C. Wilkerson also contributed a most feeling eulogy of the dear, departed sister, in whose memory these devoted ladies had planned and executed this lovely service.

Dr. C. C. Wilkerson delivered the closing prayer and benediction in terms deeply touching and appropriate to both the departed and the living.

And so we lay a last tribute of love and respect on the grave of this good woman.

Up Hill---Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

COOLIDGES FOND OF PLAIN FOOD

"Mac," Their Boston Waiter Talks About Their Simple Gastronomic Tastes.

Boston, Mass.—Much has been written lately about the simple tastes and unassuming ways of Calvin Coolidge, now President of the United States and of Mrs. Coolidge, and those who are well acquainted with them say this simplicity permeates their life. When Coolidge was governor of Massachusetts he and Mrs. Coolidge made their home at the Adams house, and their regular waiter there, "Mac," who is known to many hundreds of Bostonians, told a writer for the Boston Sunday Advertiser a lot about their gastronomical tastes. Said he:

"Their breakfast order was always the same—Two Special No. 1's, grapefruit for Mrs. Coolidge and orange for me.'

"Special No. 1 never varied. It consisted of two small pots of coffee, graham muffins and fruit.

"Mr. Coolidge would give the order and call for a clean glass and a whole orange. He would squeeze the orange himself into the glass, and drink the juice.

Silent at Meals.

"Mrs. Coolidge always had half a grapefruit.

"They were generally alone at breakfast, as their boys were at school and only visited them in vacation time. Once, though, when the boys were there, they wanted ham and eggs for breakfast. Mrs. Coolidge ordered it for them, but when the governor found it out, he frowned on giving the kids meat for breakfast.

"They were seldom at my table for lunch, as they were both often gone all day. But they would be back for dinner, unless they were dining out.

"Then Mrs. Coolidge used to order a chop—the way you do," interpolated "Mac," who has an uncanny memory for the likes and dislikes of every one of his patrons.

"Sometimes she would have a steak. But Mr. Coolidge always made his dinner on cereal—usually grape nuts and tea or milk.

"He was just as quiet at their family meals as he is in public life. Hardly ever said a word. Breakfast over, he would go away in silence.

"They seldom had guests, except Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Stearns, who were with them frequently.

"Sometimes there would be one or two others with them at dinner. On those occasions Mrs. Coolidge would try every way in the world to get him to join in the conversation. Nothing doing. He would look and listen, but hardly ever opened his mouth—except for his grape nuts. Once in a while he would shoot a little smile—like this—" and for a fleeting instant "Mac" was the living image of the President.

"He is a hard man to get at, if you know what I mean. But when you once do get at him, you find he has one of the best hearts in the world.

All Liked Mrs. Coolidge.

"But for kindness and a charming manner combined, Mrs. Coolidge was the one. Every waiter in the dining room liked to serve her. She was always considerate, always appreciative for anything done for her. If Mrs. Coolidge once knew you, she knew you everywhere, no matter where she happened to meet you. In the hotel corridor, or in the street, she would always bow. She's a fine woman.

"I used to look at those boys, and their good manners, and wonder how she did it. But then, bringing up six. (Six little McKeoughs, remember.)

"I said to one of my boys the other day, 'Look at young Calvin Coolidge. His father's President of the United States, and he's looking for farm work at $3.50 a day. I suppose if I was president you'd be wanting to take it easy in the White House.'"

A Healthy Climate.

"You must go to the healthiest neighborhood you can find," said the eminent specialist to Mr. Forsythe. "And when you get there you must stay there for six months and have a thoroughly good rest."

In due course Mr. Forsythe arrived at the seaside town he had selected and inquired of one of the old inhabitants if it was a really healthy neighborhood.

"Well, you see me," said the old man, who was a fine specimen of health and vigor, "when I came here I couldn't walk across the room and I hadn't the strength to utter a single word. I had scarcely a hair on my head and I had to be lifted on and off the bed."

"Ah, you give me hope," said the invalid. "How long have you been here?"

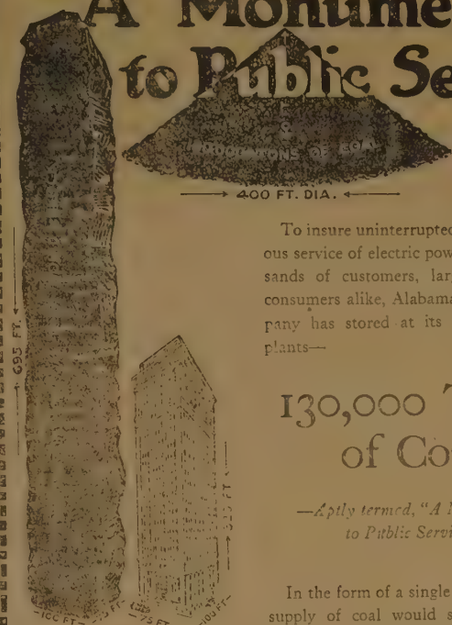
"I was born here," was the reply.

Suitcase Boats.

Two types of collapsible boats now on sale in England pack into a suitcase. A few puffs from a bicycle pump make it a sea-worthy vessel of brown canvas, with room for three children. The operation takes three minutes. Similar boats were used by Sir Ernest Shackleton in his last expedition, and the two types are named "Quest" and "Shackleton," by special permission. Each is so constructed that if the inflated part gave way the rest would float.

THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

A Monument to Public Service



To insure uninterrupted and continuous service of electric power to its thousands of customers, large and small consumers alike, Alabama Power Company has stored at its reserve steam plants—

130,000 Tons of Coal

—Aptly termed, "A Monument to Public Service."

In the form of a single cone, this vast supply of coal would stand 140 feet high, with a diamcter of 400 feet.

If shaped into a solid block, the same width and depth as the Jefferson County Bank Building at Birmingham, it would rise above the ground 695 feet; or more than twice the height of the South's tallest building.

This coal supply on September 1st, 1923, was distributed—

MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT—25,000 TONS
GADSDEN PLANT—23,000 TONS
GORGAS PLANT—81,000 TONS
MONTGOMERY PLANT—700 TONS
GUNTERSVILLE PLANT—300 TONS
TOTAL—130,000 TONS

This tremendous supply of coal represents an investment of more than $500,000.00. It is just one of the numerous items of investment and means utilized by Alabama Power Company that service to its thousands of customers throughout the State may continue day in and day out, without dependence on the flow of the rivers of Alabama, which vary radically with the seasons.

The Senate's double primary bill, which was passed in that body Tuesday, September 11th, after a warm fight, was adversed when it reached the House committee on privileges and elections Friday, September 14th.

The double primary bill which abolished second choice votes had been a steamy issue around the capitol for many days. It was contended, after the passage in the Senate, that the measure would allow two primaries within one year in the state and that it would double the cost of voting. A clause providing that judges of the supreme court, court of appeals, and circuits may be nominated in conventions and taken from the primary elections, is also found in the bill.

A hard fight was waged in the House to take the measure from the committee on privileges and elections and put it in the hands of the judiciary committee, but failed to carry. Much fireworks flared in the House before the regular committee read the adverse report. With this report the bill is considered as good as dead as no notice was served to take the bill from the adverse calendar.

One night session of the House was put to the service of disposing of one of the major issues. Tuesday night, September 11th, the massive and complicated agricultural code was finally passed. Eleventh hour fireworks failed to materialize and the bill went through on greased skids. Under the provisions of the bill all agricultural work in Alabama will be brought under the supervision of a state board of agriculture and all subsidiary boards which have controlled various agricultural and kindred activities will be abolished. After Governor Brandon had insisted that no increases should be made in the appropriations of the state the sum of $225,000 suggested for the agricultural appropriation was cut to $149,850.

The "sg" code now goes to the Senate where speedy disposition is foreseen.

Senator Walter S. Brower was again defeated in his efforts to take state and county convicts of Alabama from under the yoke of the lease system, when the Senate finance and taxation committee voted Wednesday afternoon, September 12th, to adverse his bill on county convicts and to indefinitely postpone action on the bill relative to state convicts.

The Senator was undaunted in defeat and stated that the fight for the abolition of the convict lease system would be continued into other sessions. Opponents of the anti-lease forces say unless some method can be found to take care of the revenues the state would lose by the abolition of the system the fight will be waged in vain.

Adversements seemed to be the order the whole week, as the House committee on local legislation adversed providing for an election of the county school superintendent of Chambers county. Warm debates have centered around the issue of school head elections during the whole sessions. Later the senate committee on education reported unfavorably the Hudgens School bill which provided for the compulsory attendance at public schools for all children of school age within the state. The measure would have been a blow to the private and parochial schools and a vigorous fight was waged against the bill by those favoring the latter type of schools.

Appropriation bills for the state colleges and schools have been passed. They remain at the same figures as those of last year.

The end of the 1923 quadrennial session of the Alabama Legislature being predicted for Friday, September 28th, when, if the lawmakers have used the normal number of legislative days per week the session will reach the fiftieth convocation and automatically end.

"HE MEANT ME!"

SYNOPSIS—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an old-time friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a by-word in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac.

"'Pon word, fellow, you had the effrontery to show up, then?"

Something in the cold eyes of the taller man stung through to his drunken brain. "I will not fight you, eh? Is that what you are thinking? Of course not—of course not, Captain Sazarac! I—of His Majesty's Service, and you—not a gentleman in the city could vouch for you!"

"Colonel Carr," put in the girl steadily, "will you cease?" She stepped nearer: "The gentleman but wishes to depart. The house will be aroused, the servants are gabbling now!"

"You will excuse him, sir," Madame Carr turned to the stranger; and even in her disarray, he saw that she was matronly beautiful, but hollow-eyed as one torn by ceaseless anxiety: "He does not know of what he speaks."

"I can speak that, Madame, that would put all Louisiana in an uproar. Langhorne, the consul, will open his eyes when—when—"

With a sudden furious movement Mrs. Carr closed his mouth. He threw her off violently. "Cease this, Madame! I am not a child, or fool! Already about this crack-brained city the clouds are gathering! From the Sabine country the Spaniards—"

"Be still!" She checked him with rising fury. In the moonlight her eyes held the glitter of a tigress. But the officer's drunken madness became uncontrollable.

"To your rooms, you women! Both of you! As for this man—" he turned again, staring abruptly at the tall cloaked figure; for the time, he had forgotten him: "Bah! He is here because—"

"We know," put in the elder woman coldly, "he has ruined you at cards—everything. The consul has informed me of this humiliation beyond words."

Carr was laughing evilly again. "Eh, well! The pot-house gallants saw it all. Oh, ho!—there were wagers that Captain Sazarac would not even dare lift his face again at the gaming-houses. He would find pretexts, he would invent reasons—indeed it was a shabby trick to put upon—even a packet gambler!"

There was a silence. Madame Carr was staring at the stranger.

"What is this, sir? I heard some silly story of the cardrooms—Madame des Trehan would not explain, but there was comment, upon the promenade, today. Sir, as my husband but shouts, laughing, will you enlighten us?"

Monsieur Sazarac stood with folded arms. The girl in white was watching him doubtfully. Suddenly she came nearer. There was almost pleading in her softness.

"Tell me. There was some cruel jest put upon you, sir?"

The stranger would not answer. Carr laughed hoarsely, lurching against the rail.

"The jest is this, ladies! Upon the packet trip, this man was all eyes for one of you. Chagrined that I would not introduce him, he was bent upon breaking me at cards. He had the luck of a cold devil even to the last throw at Maspero's. Eh, well, it was but a jest! The town chuckles over it. I wagered him—against his winnings of the packet, a bond girl of our household. He took it greedily—ha-ha!"

"Sir, we traveled with no servant save the public help," the wife put in.

"That is true." Carr straightened up with drunken gravity. "But he took the wager. He thought, evilly enough, there was a wench of San Domingo—fair as one of you. He was imbecile enough to yearn for her glances!"

"Your word, sir, if you recall?" said Sazarac gravely.

"A jest! Who would deem it but a cantroom jest?"

The stranger turned as if to escape from an unpleasing situation. But the elder woman suddenly came between them. "But what is this curious thing they whisper of along the promenade? I caught a laugh, a pitying look!"

She swept scornfully upon her husband. "Did you, then, cheat at the cards?"

Carr roared his mirth: "No—on my honor! There was no need!"

"The affair is done," murmured the stranger. "Your pardon, Madame!"

But as he made to pass, Carr must gibe once more at him "Your wager, sir? The prize you claim—which was it?"

The silence grew acute. The two women stared unbelievingly; the younger turned widening eyes upon the silent stranger.

"He told you—that?"

"Nothing, Mademoiselle. Allow me to depart!"

"He meant me! A girl of San Domingo! Bandied my name in the cardrooms—"

"You were not mentioned, Mademoiselle. I never knew your name before. You will allow me to go, Mademoiselle Lestron. It is enough—"

"It is not enough! You do not know all, sir!" She turned swiftly to the drunken colonel and struck him sharply in the face. "You dared this! You infamous coward! I—a slave of San Domingo—"

Carr stood in an abject sobering. "Louise, this is folly!"

"I shall speak! Whom could you mean?"

"Eh? A jest! I said, a jest—not meant for anyone's ears but his and mine! He had the impudence to come here—to claim—something—" Carr settled back on the rail uncertainly.

"Something?" Miss Lestron turned icily to Sazarac. "Sir, and what?"

"I do not know. I had no thought save to seek Colonel Carr and demand satisfaction. The affair could have been arranged at the Oaks with no breath of the quarrel's point. One of us should die . . . the other's lips sealed in honor. Was that not enough, Mademoiselle, for your protection?"

Sazarac, the river gamester, saw a curious light in her eyes. Gratefulness, scorn, or the brief interest in this idea of protecting her, he could not say which, for she turned at once to the other man. Her voice flowed on steadily but mounting to a peak of implacable contempt.

"On the turn of a card, sir? You played high—very high . . . an empire, perhaps, risked in a Chartres gambling house!"

"Will you be still?" blustered Carr, staggering forth. "A jest—I said a jest on him! Your name was not in it! I said a slave girl. Bah—I will go to Langhorne and borrow a wench to pay my debt, if that is the issue!"

"You had best both be still," warned the older woman, frightened now. "Louise, come—this is no matter for a cardroom brawl. Sazarac—if he is vouched for as a gentleman in this city, must challenge. I suppose—ah, God! He will challenge—" And, passing them with high head but tear-dimmed eyes, Madame Carr went to her chambers.

"Bah," muttered Carr with sudden drunken sleepiness. "Go home, Sazarac! You, to your rooms, Louise! My head aches with all this ranting! It was a jest. On Sazarac, because of his taking my last farthing—on Louise, because of her airs. Enough, it's done. Sazarac can challenge and be d—d. He can send a second—if he knows a gentleman in the city, which is improbable—when I am sober. My affair is in Langhorne's hands. Now, to bed!"

He staggered along the gallery. But suddenly, with a shrug, a bow—a face serene in the moonlight—Captain Sazarac addressed him.

"Sir, I am minded to recall my words. Now, I shall claim my wager!"

"I say—to bed—" mumbled Carr thickly. He reeled at his door, waved a palsied finger at them and crashed against the furniture within.

Miss Lestron stood at the balustrade of the winding staircase as the stranger was descending. A step below he turned:

"I claim my wager. Let them have a care who put a jest upon me in this town! The sea is near . . . and it is wide. Wide, Mademoiselle, and deep; and far—very far, is the way to its secret places."

"I do not understand." She was watching him intently. He had gone to the next turn of the staircase. The moonlight struck the silver of his sword hilt. She leaned forth, and her eyes struck fire from his own when he glanced up. "Far?" she whispered: "And it may be beautiful!"

He watched her lips. The perfume of the jasmined wall seemed to rise from the court and engage her; she seemed afloat in a purple sea formed by the shadows. A face, a form luminous in the mists of his dark years of remembrance. The soul of his youth was stirring . . . he had dared all, lost all, on decisions quick, hot, pregnant as this, in days long put behind.

"I love you," he said quietly. "You will remember that."

She heard his boot on the stones of the court. He was passing the pomegranate clump when he thought something flashed near him in the moonlight.

A white thing, a light thing—a feather, a petal in the air. But he saw no more, nor heard a sound from above. He went to the untenanted street, wondering if she had waited until his footsteps died away. He wondered why he had spoken; and then he laughed. Sazarac, the packet gamester . . . Jean Lafitte, last of the sea-adventurers—ghost of a vanished time, back to tread the streets where his life was not worth the flicker of a moonbeam in the jasmine screen below her window.

After he had gone, something did stir. A man crawled out from the shadows across the area, went to the gardened center of the court and searched under the fig and pomegranate leaves. Presently he muttered and straightened up, a white blossom in his hand.

"Eh?" he said. "A camellia . . . it has been in her hair. She was to wear it to the opera, and Carr's orgy tonight prevented. I would have seen her pass . . . she would have thought me a red-eyed beggar standing by the areaway, but I would have seen her pass."

John Jarvis stared up at the silent balcony. Then he, too, went his way.

"The Cafe la Veau Qui Tete—" he grumbled. "I shall put on my old waistcoat again to get drunk in. Sazarac! D—n this Sazarac! A flower from her hair, and the fool did not see it! A flower for Sazarac!"

At the Cafe la Veau he entered by the garden gate and went to sit among the huge wine tuns under the tiled shed. "Three measures of liquor and I could paint a white camellia against her hair," he mused; "but the taproom and I together could not paint love in her eye—for me."

After that he sought a bench and slept. Presently in came another and by the same stealthy passageway. A huge seaman, this, with broad hairy chest, and tattooed arms. He examined the sleeping painter, took off his coat and spread it above him. "He must be kept drunken and asleep," muttered Johanness. "The fool would shout it through the town—the Captain Jean returned, and meeting us old ghosts up from the islands! Enter, Old Silt-Nose! None here save John, the taproom avocat. A howl from him and he draws my knife point! Sit quiet and await. Our host gave me the keys and is abed . . . he prefers not to know what he should not know, like any wise man!"

Try This Formula for Feet.

Not alone upon the choice of shoes does the comfort of the feet depend. Even perfectly healthy, normal feet need particular daily care. With such care even tender feet become normal. After shopping or walking and at the close of the day, it is an excellent thing to bathe the feet in cold water, Julia W. Wolfe writes in the Health Builder. If you cannot endure the shock of cold water at first, begin with tepid water and add the cold water gradually. When it is convenient, the faucet—cold water—should be allowed to play upon the feet. The reaction of the cold water aids circulation and gives tone to the arteries. Use no soap in the tonic foot bath; free alkali, which might be present in the soap, tends to blister the feet. With this treatment continued daily, one's feet soon grow healthy and foot troubles are a thing of the past.

Fats and oils in the diet are two and one-fourth times more effective than either proteins or carbohydrates as sources of energy.

USE FOR THERMOMETERS ON FARMS

An Oven Thermometer Means Accurate Baking.

There is something inexplicably consoling about being able to determine beyond dispute, and before the weather man can corroborate us, that the temperature is actually 95 degrees on the front porch, or that the mercury has reached the freezing point and appears to be going still lower. It is such a simple matter to hang up a reliable thermometer out of doors—in the shade, of course—and to guide one's course of action by reading it. Whether one wants to know merely that Johnny may leave off his winter flannels or that the young tomato plants are threatened by frost and must be covered, the thermometer makes a real contribution to one's peace of mind.

In connection with many farm processes, too, there are uses for thermometers of various types. In the dairy, for example, the temperature of the milk must not be left to guesswork either, when storing or pasteurizing it, nor can butter be properly made by chanting "butter come, butter come" instead of testing the temperature of the cream before churning. The incubator must be kept at a constant correctly determined temperature. The place where vegetables or canned goods are stored should not become warmer than 50 degrees Fahrenheit, nor lower than 32 degrees Fahrenheit. Both cellar and refrigerator must be watched by means of a thermometer to make sure that perishable food kept in them will not spoil. A thermometer can be used to find out the temperature of the soil before planting, and many orchardists have to watch for changes of a few degrees in the temperature of the air to know when to start fires to prevent damage to their fruit by spring frosts. For sick farm animals a special clinical thermometer is used just as with human patients.

Different Kinds Needed.

For real efficiency inside the house several different kinds of thermometers are needed. The ordinary room thermometer is similar to the standard out-of-doors type, and is invaluable as a fuel saver. It gives warning that a room has reached a temperature of 68 degrees or 70 degrees and that the fire, therefore, may be checked. In cases of sickness, where an unvarying temperature must be maintained, or when there is a very young baby to keep warm, a room thermometer is indispensable. The United States Department of Agriculture recommends that for a correct reading the thermometer should not be hung on the wall, but nearer the middle of the room, about four or five feet from the floor, perhaps from a chandelier. In a sick room it may be well to hang the thermometer on a level with the patient's head.

The presence of a baby in the house necessitates at least two other thermometers. For baby's bath it is not a safe practice for the nurse to test the temperature of the water with her elbow. Adult elbows vary in their sensitiveness to heat, but the skin of a tiny baby can easily be hurt if the water is too hot. Using a bath thermometer, which is made with a wooden frame so as to float, is a much more reliable way of testing the bath water. Every mother also needs a clinical thermometer, for children run high fevers occasionally and the doctor always wants to know the exact temperature.

Useful in Cooking.

In the kitchen cooking without a thermometer is mere guesswork for the inexperienced. It is more and more frequently the case that modern cookbooks give oven temperatures for baking bread or for roasting meat. Sometimes it is suggested that meat be baked with a thermometer thrust into its center, if it is desirable to have "rare roast beef." Oven thermometers must be capable of recording temperatures ranging as high as 650 degrees to 700 degrees Fahrenheit.

A sirup or candy thermometer is another type that registers temperatures higher than boiling point, and that consequently, may be used in determining when cooking sugar has reached a desired point for a canning sirup or a particular kind of confection. A thermometer should guide the operator when "boiling down" maple sugar or making boiled icings, jellies and similar foods in which sugar occurs. Custards would not be allowed to curdle if a thermometer were consulted during their preparation and their temperatures allowed to go no higher than 180 degrees Fahrenheit, nor would deep fat frying fail if the temperature of the fat were carefully watched and kept between 175 degrees and 200 degrees Fahrenheit.

There is a thermometer for almost every household use, and with a little practice one learns to depend on the various kinds for different purposes.

CORN PRESERVED BY DRYING

Long Been Practiced in Household and Is to Certain Extent Prepared Commercially.

The preservation of green corn by drying has long been practiced in the household and dried corn is, to a limited extent, prepared commercially. The ears of corn are first scalded for about five minutes, then cooled and the kernels cut from the cob. Unless the corn is very young and tender the resulting dried corn will be much more satisfactory if only the tips of the kernels are removed by the first cut and the remaining pulp scraped out with a dull knife, leaving the most of the hulls behind on the cob. Even in the case of young corn, the cutting should not be so close as to include the base of the kernel.

The corn may be dried by any convenient method. Where a large quantity is being prepared it may be spread upon a table covered with muslin. Of course it must be protected from flies. The corn should be well stirred from time to time until thoroughly dry.

When wanted for use the dry corn should be rinsed quickly in cold water and put to soak for several hours in a small amount of water in which it is to be cooked. The cooking should be done slowly and water added as needed. Cooked dried corn may be used in any way in which canned corn is served. Dried corn has a sweet, nutty flavor, and is especially liked for making cream or corn soup or in succotash.

Placing Silverware on Table.

SAVE MINERALS IN CARROTS

Cut in Narrow Strips and Cooked Until Tender With Butter Added They Are Delicious.

Most vegetables should be cooked in a small amount of water, says the United States Department of Agriculture, because mineral salts are likely to be dissolved by the water, and thrown away with it. The following recipe for cooking carrots enables one to save all of these valuable mineral salts. Other vegetables can be similarly prepared.

Wash and scrape small carrots and cut in narrow strips. Cook three cupfuls of the carrots in just enough water to cover. When carrots are tender and only a small amount of water remains, add a tablespoonful of butter. Cook slowly until almost all of the remaining water has evaporated. The carrots will have a delicious flavor cooked this way and none of the minerals will be wasted.

String beans cut in halves lengthwise or parsnips cut in strips are also good served this way.

Household Questions

When cleaning marble, use common salt, which should be rubbed on and then rinsed off.

* * *

Always keep your tea and coffee in covered containers. Otherwise they lose their strength.

* * *

Always stir a newly opened bottle of milk if you would mix the cream through it. Otherwise the top cream can be removed and used for breakfast cereal.

A conservative estimate complied from the reports of farmers located in almost every quarter of a century that the cotton crop is 65 per cent gathered now.

It will be interesting to observe how Gov. Walton, of Oaklahoma, comes out in his attempt to transpose the gubernational chair into the throne of a Czar.

The talk now in democratic circles has about narrowed down to Underwood and McAdoo. Both of them are good, safe men and we can't go far wrong if we get either.

Gov. Walton, of Oklahoma, is heading straight towards impeachment as the needle points to the pole. Governors are being made out of mighty small timber these days anyhow.

Grand Juries in Alabama and Oklahoma seem to be loosing their constitutional power these days. Has the constitution become a "mere scrap of paper."

What is it, a love of filthy lucre or an abnormally developed love of power that inspires an executive officer to break over the line and attempt to controll the judiciary as well?

A Western Bankers Association is shooting the country with a request that everybody ask congress to let the tariff alone and not disturb business. There are several kinds of business prospering under the present tariff that need "disturbing" and need it bad.

The Alabama Power Company has perfected the manufacture of Calcium arsenate, a deadly poison for boll weevils, and has given to the farmers of Alabama a $250,000 plant in Montgomery for making it. That looks like real concrete help for the farmer without much gas.

The bill that passed both houses of the legislature placing a $50 fine on any person caught in the state operating a motor driven vehicle with an open cut out, if signed and placed on the statute books of Alabama, will cause countless thousands unborn to rise up and call this legislature blessed.

A noted scientist, Dr. Houston of Philadelphia, who claims to have predicted the Japanese earthquake two years ago, says the United States is due for a similar catastrophe this winter. THE COTTON CROP

A few more days of fair weather will see the bulk of the cotton crop in this section picked and ready for market.

The crop is not going to average up more than one fourth of a normal yield, but if the price will remain up to 30 cents or better, the condition of the farmers is not going to be so serious as would seem to be indicated by the small crop.

It looks like Providence just naturally arranges to take care of the farmer in spite of everything and we are certainly glad that such is the case.

Talking about real fundamentals, the farmer is the mainspring that moves the world and when calamity hits him all the rest of us react to the blow about as seriously as he does.

The farmer is about the largest potential gambler in the world and plays against the greatest odds.

In the first place, when any part of the government decides to squander a little more money among its henchmen the first thing they do is to raise a great cry about legislating some scheme through to aid the poor farmer. When the whole country has been flooded with propaganda along this line they proceed to put the legislation over. It is put in to operation and the first thing we observe is that this wonderful bill for the relief of the farmer, instead of helping him, has only landed another solar plexus blow on his pocket book and he is mulched for another assessment to keep the political machinery of some party or faction oiled up.

Then he has to play against, untold millions of pests, blights and insects that conspire to ruin him, and this is one of the unknown elements that he goes up against. The seasons are also beyond any possible influence that he can exert, and here again, the elements of chance is all that he has to depend on.

Nothing about the business of the farmer is a sure thing, except the fact that he will always find plenty of hard work to do to keep him out of mischief.

This year legislation, the weather and the insect horde have massed forces against him and it looked, for a time, like he was going to be cleaned out utterly, but the price of coton got loose from the gamesters and if it will only keep out of their hands for a few more weeks, the farmer will still be badly hurt but not totally busted.

Here is hoping for 40 cent cotton.

ANOTHER VAT BLOWN

Early last Saturday night some one blew up the Dipping Vat out near Pletcher, known as the Deason vat.

This is the third time this vat has been destroyed and, we learn, that four men are now under bond awaiting the action of the court charged with having blown it up a short time ago.

Sheriff Littlejohn was on the scene of the blast Saturday night in about an hour after it occured and had some track hounds with him, but the dogs were young and not well trained and could do very little with the track. So no arrests have been made as yet.

The people who blow up vats are in their own light. They oppose cattle dipping and have a grievance against the system, but their attempts to stay the hands of the United States government are absolutely futile and the only thing that can possibly result from their methods in the end will be their own individual arrest and punishment.

We printed the acts of Congress relating to cattle dipping in the Chilton County News away back before the election to prove to every one where this law came from. Every person in Chilton County who is capable of at all understanding the English language could not fail to see then who was behind the movement.

Since that time and not so very long ago, the government has vindicated the truth of what we told you then by putting on an extensive and thorough moving picture demonstration and lecture course all over the county making this matter perfectly clear to everyone. Not only that, they are maintaining today a local director and manager in the county who is doing his utmost to educate the people on this question.

You can not make local politics out of it no matter who tries to beat that idea into your head. The job belongs entirely to Uncle Sam, and you better take it from us as your friend and go forward and obey the law and get through with it, for if you don't, you mark this prediction, and remember it hereafter, that you will be annoyed with this thing year after year until you do and these misguided people who blow up vats will go before a Federal Judge and into a Federal prison for a long term of years the first thing they know.

The United States government never lets up—never quits—and they can afford to put Chilton full of secret agents and keep them here as long as they are needed to make absolute law enforcement a fact and they will do it.

A GOOD MOVE

The meeting called for the Court house tomorrow night deserves the support of every citizen in Chilton county.

If you go out to this meeting you will hear about some conditions in our county that are almost unbelieveable. How our streams are being depopulated of fish by dynamite and minnow seins, killing the small fish by thousands in an effort to catch the larger ones. Such policy as this, if allowed to go on unchecked, will soon do away with all of the fish we have, and this source of supply of a delicacy belonging to us all, will disappear entirely.

People also kill quail, and other game birds, in the breeding season and often, by one fatal shot they destroy a whole covey of little birds by killing the parent.

Squirrell shooting is another thing that certainly needs attention. Young squirrells, and old ones too, for that matter, are not fit for food before November 1st. They are more than apt to be infested with wolves in the hide and are totally worthless. They should be protected.

Come out to this meeting and talk these matters over.

SELLING TOO FREELY

As cotton went up last week, finally registering at the 30 cent point the farmers all over the cotton belt strained every nerve to get theirs on the market.

The result has been exactly what might have been expected. The price broke and the quotations have had a downward tendency ever since.

This same thing is repeated, over and over again every season, but the farmers are slow to get on to the game and, never in our recollection, have they failed to bite at the bait and then suffer the fate of the average sucker.

We all know, beyond the shadoy of a doubt that the crop this year is pitifully short. We also know that the spinners are bound to buy it to keep up their contracts and they are in a position to save themselves, for they advance their product on the market to cover all cost as well as an extravagant profft. They will spin as much and make as much money, perhaps, at 40 cents as they would at 10 cents.

Then why not hold the crop off of the market and force the price up before you sell? There is no surplus cotton in the world today. We mean no real surplus. The supply is growing daily shorter for next year and cotton is bound to soar as soon as it gets out of the farmers hands.

Products Must Get To A Market Before They Become Valuable
The value of any product, whether from farm or factory, depends upon its being taken to the place where there are people who need that particular product and are willing to pay the right price for it.
Coal lying in the field, steel at the foundry, lumber at the mill, fruit on the trees, corn in the shock, tobacco in the warehouse and cement at the plant; all have little real worth until they are transported to where there is a market for them.
Diamonds are worth no more than cobble stones until they are taken to the people who are ready and willing to exchange dollars for them.
The Louisville & Nashville Railroad performs a valuable service for the farms and factories of the thirteen states in which it operates, by carrying their products to important markets and to Southern ports for shipment to the consuming nations of the world.
The prosperous condition of the territory served by the L. & N. has been brought about largely by the excellent service rendered by this Railroad in getting the products of the farms and factories to the markets

Double Braking Efficiency
Buick Four-Wheel Brakes

Buick four-wheel brakes; because they double the braking surface brought into action, increase the braking efficiency of the car practically 100 per cent.

The action is simple, positive and rapid. A slight pressure on the service pedal (the method of operation is unchanged) and all four wheels are retarded—the car is quickly, smoothly and safely brought to a stop. With these proved Buick four-wheel brakes a stop is made in a much shorter distance with a minimum of skidding danger.

Obtaining braking friction at four contacts with the road increases the braking power and lessens the wear on each brake lining and each tire.

The 1924 Buick models, with four-wheel brakes; a more powerful engine, beautiful new bodies and numerous other advanced features fully exemplify the Buick policy of incorporating every improvement that will give greater safety, comfort and satisfaction to the owner.

MRS. COFFMAN ILL SEVEN YEARS

Saved from an Operation by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sidell, Ill.—"I was a nervous wreck. I was suffering from a pain in my left side, which was almost unbearable, and I could not even let the bed clothing rest on my body at night. I had been sick for seven years, but not so bad until the last eighteen months, and had become so run-down that I cared for nobody, and would rather have died than live. I couldn't do my work without help, and the doctors told me that an operation was all there was left. I would not consent to that, so my husband brought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged me to take it. I have taken fourteen bottles of it, and I feel ten years younger. Life is full of hope. I do all my housework and had a large garden this year. I never will be without the Vegetable Compound in the house, and when my two little girls reach womanhood I intend to teach them to take it. I am never too busy to tell some suffering sister of my help, and you can use my name and letter to spread the good news of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines."—Mrs. Ida M. Coffman, R.R. 2, Sidell, Ill.

HAD TO AVOID GREASY FOOD

Boatman Suffered From Indigestion, But by Taking Black-Draught, Says He Got So He "Could Eat Anything."

Stephensport, Ky.—"For some time I suffered with indigestion, or dyspepsia," says Mr. Henry Gross, of this place. "I couldn't eat the least thing greasy—if I did, I would spit it up. I suffered a great deal."

Since his work requires him to be on an Ohio river steamboat much of his time, Mr. Gross says that he "had to eat at different places, and I suffered because I had to be so particular to get something that wouldn't hurt me. I had a hurting in my stomach, and a slick, bitter taste in my mouth. Some one said I needed a liver medicine. I began with Black-Draught and it has given perfect satisfaction. I took a pinch after meals and it regulated me. I got so I could eat about anything and enjoy it. Black-Draught is all right."

A pinch of Black-Draught, taken for a few days at a time, after meals, washed down with a swallow of water, has, in thousands of cases, relieved simple indigestion. As a result of the action of the medicinal roots and herbs of which it is composed, Black-Draught gently stimulates the flow of the digestive juices, and helps to relieve, or prevent constipation, in an easy, natural manner. Try it. 25c.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Sensational Doings in Governor Walton's War on the Klan in Oklahoma.

STATE UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Legislature Plans to Hold Extra Session—Spain Now Ruled by Dictator and Directorate—Baldwin and Poincare Confer—Berkeley, Cal., Is Swept by Flames.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

OKLAHOMA has become the center of the war against the Ku Klux Klan. Developments there last week were sensational, and the future is looked to not without some apprehension. Enraged by more of the floggings which are reasonably supposed to be committed or incited by the Klan, Gov. J. C. Walton announced that a state of insurrection and rebellion against the laws and constituted authorities of the state existed, and therefore he proclaimed martial law for the entire state and ordered absolute martial law for Oklahoma City, Oklahoma county and Creek county. Units of the National Guard were called out and a military commission set up and began the examination and trial of civilians—a thing that has not been seen in the United States for many years.

An order was issued prohibiting "all public meetings, publications, literature and verbal expressions tending to create opposition to the enforcement of martial law in Oklahoma county," and consequently the newspapers there have been cautious. However, the publishers of several of the largest dailies in the state have signed and many of the papers have printed an address to the people of the United States declaring that "the supreme issue in Oklahoma today is constitutional government or despotism," and asserting that "Governor Walton, by his acts, has attempted to nullify rights guaranteed under our Constitution, and to halt the lawful processes of republican government."

In another address the editors urged the members of the legislature to meet immediately, and this is what a large number of the legislators have been planning to do. Walton says he will not permit it, and is quoted as declaring that if the lawmakers assemble he will build a stockade and put them in it. Notwithstanding the threat, almost a majority of the members of the lower house have signed and issued a call for a special session for the purpose of investigating charges against the governor of "repeated injuries, usurpations and blunders, evidencing the direct object of establishing an absolute tyranny and despotism over the commonwealth."

Walton has strong political support, made up of Farmer-Laborites, radical Democrats and a kind of Nonpartisan league, but some of these, especially the Laborites, do not take kindly to martial law. The "invisible empire" men are not openly combating the governor's methods, but are working under cover with great energy, and it is believed that in a measure they can control a special session of the legislature. Their fiery crosses continued to blaze over certain buildings in Oklahoma City until Thursday, when Walton ordered them struck down.

Walton, if he reads the news from Europe, may seek to emulate Benito Mussolini and Gen. Primo Rivera, but if so he will have to learn that there is a vast difference between the conditions and peoples in Italy and Spain and those in the United States. No dictatorships are necessary or desired in any of our commonwealths.

SO FAR, the coup d'etat of the military aristocracy of Spain is altogether successful. King Alfonso, yielding perforce to the revolutionists, created a national directorate and made Primo Rivera its president with virtually dictatorial powers. The positions of premier and cabinet ministers were suppressed. The new government announced its five principal objectives as follows:

First, to exterminate syndicalism and other communist doctrines;

Second, to crush the separatist movement in Catalonia and Basque provinces;

Third, to prosecute a victorious campaign in the Spanish zone in Morocco;

Fourth, to establish an honest, efficient government;

Fifth, to make guilty politicians as well as officers suffer for the big Melilla defeat.

Rivera called on the country to form a "Gran Somaten" or militia patterned closely after the Italian Fascisti, to number 450,000. With this organization, responsible to him alone, he proposes to protect the "established interests" of Spain. The International Communists who have been flourishing in Barcelona and other Spanish cities since the Russian agents began active work there in 1918, have realized that the game is up for the present at least, and have been fleeing from the country. Many of their leaders were caught and locked up last week. In pursuance of the plan for a vigorous campaign against the Moorish rebels the Spanish fleet on Wednesday began to bombard the hills above Alhucemas bay with gas shells, to clear the way for the landing of a large expeditionary force. General Aizpuru, the new commander in chief in Morocco, started to organize an offensive on the western flank.

The Spaniards feel it necessary to demonstrate their ability to govern the Morocco zone at once, because in a few days the Tangier conference in London will open, when Spain will demand permission to rule the Tangier zone. The United States is interested in that conference and has notified Great Britain, France and Spain that it will not accept any settlement of the future control of Tangier which hinders the establishment there of American marine coaling and oiling bases. An interesting story from Madrid says the old Spanish government was conducting negotiations with England by which Gibraltar was to be traded by Great Britain for the valuable harbors of Tangier, Ceuta and Melilla and that news of this reached the military leaders of Spain and hastened the revolt.

TO COMPLETE the record of the dictators, it may be said that Premier Mussolini of Italy is "sitting pretty" in his disputes and negotiations with Greece, Jugo-Slavia and the League of Nations. The Greek government has paid the "moral reparations" for the Janina murders by apologizing for them, saluting the flags of Italy, France and England, and attending a solemn requiem mass in the Catholic cathedral of Athens for the slain Italian officers. Diplomatic negotiations with the Serbs concerning Fiume are said to be progressing amicably, but the government of that so-called independent state resigned the other day and Mussolini promptly appointed General Giardini, third in command of the Italian army, as military governor. He gave assurance that this did not affect the status of Fiume, but it served to increase the fear that he meant to annex that city. In the sessions of the League of Nations there were further harsh criticisms of the league's inaction in the matter of the occupation of Corfu, especially by Hjalmar Branting. In reply the Italian delegate, Signor Salandra, defended the seizure of the island and expressed the hope that the dispute between Italy and Greece, now on the way to final settlement, would not be reopened. He then delivered another severe blow to the authority of the league, declaring that the covenant was not supreme international law, but only part of fundamental legislation for regulating international conduct.

BULGARIAN irregulars and Macedonian irredentists are bringing on a crisis between Jugo-Slavia and Bulgaria. They have been gathering along the frontier, and Belgrade has warned Sofia that if they invade Serbian territory war will result. Bulgaria has sought the diplomatic intervention of the allied powers.

PRIME MINISTER BALDWIN spent a couple of days in Paris last week and had a long, chummy talk with Premier Poincare about world affairs in general and German reparations in particular. It is understood Poincare expressed a willingness to meet Baldwin next month in London when probably a more formal discussion will be held. The German reichstag has been called to meet September 26, and it is presumed Chancellor Stresemann will announce an increased offer to France and also the formal withdrawal of the passive resistance policy in the Ruhr.

POOR Japan, struggling toward recovery, was afflicted again. A typhoon struck the eastern coast and a tremendous rainfall brought floods that drowned thousands of the refugees of the earthquake. The first foreign check to be received in Japan for the relief of the quake victims was handed to Premier Yamamoto by Ambassador Woods. It was for $1,000,000 and came from the American people through the Red Cross. The American army and navy representatives there are exceedingly active in the relief work, and at home the Red Cross fund is growing daily, being well on the way to $10,000,000.

CHEERFUL news comes from Washington in a treasury statement. During the first ten weeks of the new fiscal year, ending September 15, the government reduced its usual expenses $42,000,000 and increased its income $29,000,000.

The increased revenue included climbs of $12,000,000 in customs and $28,000,000 in income taxes. Miscellaneous internal revenue increases showed $239,000,000 or a decline of about $5,000,000. The total income tax collection figure was given as $124,000,000.

Interest on the public debt was only $38,000,000, a reduction of $12,000,000. In general expenses for legislative and legislative departments, a decrease of $20,000,000 is shown, reducing the cost to $425,000,000.

The shipping board was one of the few departments showing an increase in expense. It climbed to $21,466,000, an increase of $6,000,000.

Refunds of customs and internal revenue receipts totaled $30,000,000, but this was $12,000,000 less than in the same period last year. Railroad claims settlements caused withdrawals amounting to $18,000,000, as against $21,000,000 last year.

UNITED STATES Prohibition Commissioner Haynes, in a letter to Congressman Hill of Maryland, says it is the intention of the government "to interfere as little as possible" with the right of the farmer to make cider. He continues: "Compared with the abuses arising from the manufacture of distilled spirits and fermented liquors, violations of the national prohibition act arising from the practices of farmers and of manufacturers of cider and fruit juices are practically inconsequential."

Great Britain has replied to Secretary Hughes' proposal for a reciprocal agreement on ship liquor and liquor smuggling, including extension of the search limit to twelve miles, and the reply is described in Washington as being "not sympathetic" to the plan. However, the British government will submit the question to the imperial conference which meets next month in London.

WHEN the new dail of the Irish Free State met in Dublin, every one of the 109 members who had taken the oath of allegiance was present, and they unanimously re-elected William Cosgrave president of the state. Forty-four Republican members were absent, eighteen of them being in prison. An appeal by a Farmer member that these rebels be permitted to meet and decide their policy was indignantly rejected by Cosgrave and others, who declared there would be no compromise with rebellion.

MORE than fifty blocks of the best residence section of Berkeley, Cal., were swept by flames early in the week, and between 12,000 and 15,000 persons were made homeless. The property loss was probably about $5,000,000. The city is the site of the University of California, and one of the most attractive in the West. Three other smaller California towns also were burned, all the conflagrations originating in forest fires.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 30

REVIEW: GREAT MEN AND WOMEN OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

DEVOTIONAL READING — Heb. 11:13-16, 39, 40.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."—Heb. 12:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Favorite Story of the Quarter.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Favorite Heroes and Heroines of the Quarter.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Some Great Characters of the New Testament.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Life Lessons From This Quarter.

With the senior and adult classes, three methods of review may be profitably employed:

1. The descriptive word method as presented in Peloubet's Select Notes.
1. Brave John the Baptist.
2. The Faith-Filled Virgin Mary.
3. Impulsive Peter.
4. Loving John the Apostle.
5. Thoughtful Matthew.
6. Ardent Mary Magdalene.
7. Busy Martha and Open-Hearted Mary.
8. Faithful Stephen.
9. Generous Barnabas.
10. The Many-sided Paul.
11. Timid Mark.
12. Helpful Luke.
13. Consecrated Timothy.

2. Presenting Life Lessons as given in Crannel's Pocket Lessons:

I. Woman Lessons.
1. Mary: Glorified Motherhood. Lesson 2.
2. Magdalene: Adoring Gratitude. Lesson 6.
3. Martha-Mary: Rounded Womanhood. Lesson 7.

II. Leader Lessons.
1. Peter: Compacted Zeal. Lesson 3.
2. John: Ripened Love. Lesson 4.
3. Paul: Passionate Devotion. Lesson 10.

III. Helper Lessons.
1. John: Faithful Pioneering. Lesson 1.
2. Matthew: Divine Transformations. Lesson 5.
3. Stephen: Heroic Witness. Lesson 8.
4. Barnabas: Greatening Greatness. Lesson 9.
5. Mark: Return of the Quitter. Lesson 11.
6. Luke: Double Healer. Lesson 12.
7. Timothy: The Glorious Ministry. Lesson 13.

3. The Summarizing of Contents. The following is suggestive:

Lesson I. John the Baptist was a humble and courageous man. He did not take honor to himself nor trim his message to suit the crowd.

Lesson II. Mary should not be worshiped, but she is worthy of great honor. Her faith made her to acquiesce in the Lord's will in spite of the fact that she knew that her character would be suspected.

Lesson III. Peter, while being fickle and cowardly, is a fine example of the transforming power of God's grace.

Lesson IV. John the apostle was a reticent man. He did not say much about himself, but was passionately in love with his Lord.

Lesson V. Matthew, though humble, was a man of force of character and decision. He left all and followed Jesus.

Lesson VI. Mary Magdalene, because she was saved, was steadfast in her devotion to the Lord. Because of this, she was able to tell the good news of the resurrection to the discouraged disciples.

Lesson VII. Mary and Martha both loved the Lord. Martha was mistaken as to the best way to please Him. Mary chose the good part in fellowship with her Lord which has made her name immortal.

Lesson VIII. Stephen was so completely filled with Christ that his face shone as the face of an angel.

Lesson IX. Barnabas was a good man and filled with the Holy Ghost. Therefore, he was qualified as a leader of men.

Lesson X. Paul's knowledge of Jesus was so real that he had as his supreme aim to magnify Him.

Lesson XI. Mark, though having turned back from the work, was restored and became a great and honored minister of Christ.

Lesson XII. Luke, the skilled and popular physician, gave himself up to be the attendant of the missionary of the cross.

Lesson XIII. Because of Timothy's religious training, he became a worthy minister of the gospel.

Common Plates and Cups Were Once Shared—Fought for the Biggest Share.

Noble families in England in the Middle Ages shared common plates and cups, used fingers instead of forks, licked their plates, wiped their teeth on the tablecloth, and scrambled for the largest portion, says the Detroit News. Books on etiquette issued in the Fifteenth century pointed out that these things were not good manners. The art of cooking in the Middle Ages flourished, however, cooks excelling at artistic and rich confectionery.

Dancing in medieval times was true to its name. Dancers really moved with nimbleness and agility instead of slowly posturing round the room in the manner of modern dancers. The noble and his family and servants lived and slept in the great hall of the castle, with next to no privacy. A better state of things evolved gradually, more rooms being added and more windows put in, insuring greater seclusion for the lord and his family.

Cutting Teeth Made This Baby Deathly Sick

"When my baby began cutting his teeth he became deathly sick and his constant crying almost broke my heart," writes Mrs. D. H. Tidwell, Grand View, Texas, "but as soon as I started giving him Teethina he got over it and next day was laughing and playing as if nothing had ever been the matter with him."

Teethina is especially designed to allay the irritation and feverish conditions that are the cause of so much fretfulness in teething children. It soon stops the pain, relieves the trouble and gives the distracted mother rest and comfort.

Teethina is sold by leading druggists or send 30c to the Moffett Laboratories, Columbus, Ga., and receive a full size package and a free copy of Moffett's Illustrated Baby Book.—(Advertisement.)

Intricate.

The most marvelous machine in the world, invented by an English gas-fitter, was exhibited recently before the British Medical association. The demonstrator was an armless man, who sat before a small table and with his feet operated the mechanism which was situated beneath. Over the table came two long, thin groping arms, like bent gas pipes, which in an uncanny way picked up from a rack the various implements required by the armless man. The latter, simply by careful movement of his feet, took a knife and fork, ate a good meal, washed himself, struck a match, lighted a cigarette and wrote a letter in pencil, placing it inside an envelope and sealing it down.

Foolish Advice.

The fussy dentist was examining the teeth of the patient, and assumed an air of great wisdom.

"Do you ever clean your teeth?" he inquired, as he pried and poked.

"Yes," replied the patient.

"How many times a day?" pursued the dentist.

"Twice," was the answer.

"Have you had any advice before with regard to your teeth?"

"Yes, I called on a doctor last night."

"And what foolish advice did he give you?"

"He told me to come to you?"

Forecasting Big Help to Farmers

Statement of What May Be Expected to Happen Based Upon Present Conditions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Agricultural forecasting by public agencies will put farmers more nearly on an even basis with those in other industries in deciding whether to continue in accordance with their old plans or readjust their production, owing to permanent changes which may have taken place in marketing conditions," says Dr. Henry C. Taylor, chief of the bureau of agricultural economics of the Department of Agriculture.

"In periods of unsettled economic conditions, agricultural forecasting is of great importance," says Doctor Taylor. "The great war has thrown economic relations out of equilibrium. The agricultural depression has resulted in efforts on the part of the farmers to improve their situation through readjustments.

"Forecasting can be viewed not only from the standpoint of the individual farmer and the merchant dealing in farm products, but also from the national point of view—the supply of food and raw materials for the nation throughout a series of years. From the individual point of view, forecasting is the basis of wise farm management and marketing.

Basis of Policy.

"From the national point of view it is the basis of a national agricultural policy. From the latter point of view agricultural forecasting centers about the question of the right utilization of land—how much should be used for each of the cultivated crops, how much for forestry and how much for parks and playgrounds in order that the maximum of national well-being may be attained.

"Frequent changes in the sources of supply, quantities produced and the consequent changes in prices of farm products lead to a desire for a better basis of judgment than most farmers now have when projecting their plans for the coming year," says Doctor Taylor. "This has led various agencies to attempt to supply this need by making forecasts of what is likely to happen. A forecast is a statement of what may be expected to happen, based upon present conditions and observations interpreted in the light of previous experience and is the basis of planning beforehand what action to take in order to secure a desired end.

"Farmers of necessity make forecasts. In the light of their knowledge of the physical and economic environment they decide what they will undertake to do for the coming year—how much land they will use, the acreage they will put into each of the various crops and the live stock they will keep as a part of the farming operations. Merchants who deal in farm products give even more attention to agricultural forecasting than do farmers themselves. In so far as the economic factors are concerned farmers too generally determine how much they will produce next year of a given crop on the basis of present prices rather than prospective prices. As a result they have often planted high-priced seed in increased quantities and sold the increased quantities of product at low prices and, in turn, planted lightly of low-priced seeds and had a small production to sell at high prices.

Supply and Demand.

"The buyers of farm products take into account not only produce on hand, but the probable future supply of the product which may be forthcoming. If there is a 10 per cent surplus of the product of one year to be carried over to the next year, the buyer of this surplus naturally bases the price he is willing to pay upon the probable price he will be able to secure the next year and this he bases on the forecast of what will probably be produced the next year.

"While forecasts have always been made by farmers and merchants and will continue to be made, it is believed that agricultural forecasting can be made more accurate by bringing to bear historical and statistical methods of collecting materials which will add to the accuracy of this forecasting.

"A knowledge of present trends in production and prices in the light of past experience will add greatly to the accuracy of forecasting. Furthermore, knowledge of the intentions of others, who are simultaneously figuring on making readjustments, will improve the basis of passing judgment. The purpose of agricultural forecasting is the wise guidance of production in order that there may continue to be a proper balance between the various lines of production and between agriculture and other industries."

Pullet Characteristics Denoting Good Layer

Any one who has studied and understands judging beef cattle will have but little difficulty in understanding the characteristics that a pullet destined to be a good laying fowl must possess. She must be built with a somewhat rectangular shape—much on the same order as is desired in a fine beef steer. Her back should be broad and flat on top, with the sides deep.

Her head should be neat and trim, with no hint of masculinity about it. It should be short and broad, with a short, well-curved beak and a bright eye.

Direction for Tanning Leather and Fur Skins

Farmer Can Make Use of Hides Produced on Farm.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Directions for tanning hides on the farm are given in a new bulletin just published by the United States Department of Agriculture, and issued as Farmers' Bulletin 1334. "Home Tanning of Leather and Small Fur Skins." This bulletin was prepared in response to the thousands of requests received from farmers for information that will enable them to make use of the hides produced on their farms and for which there is often no market. Sometimes hides can scarcely be given away, yet farmers must pay from $1 to $1.50 a pound for leather in small pieces. Under such conditions farmers naturally feel that they must either work up their raw materials or do without the finished leather.

While it is possible to do a fairly satisfactory job of tanning on the farm, it requires some skill and a considerable amount of experience. Only in the event that the margin of price between the raw hide and the finished product is such as to warrant the farmer in tanning for himself is it advisable to attempt home tanning. The inexperienced cannot hope to make leather equal in appearance, or possibly in quality, to that obtainable on the market, but farmers and ranchmen should be able to make serviceable leather for most farm purposes by carefully following the directions given in the bulletin.

It is never advisable for an inexperienced person to try to tan valuable fur skins or large hides to be made into coats, robes, or rugs. The results would be disappointing, both in appearance and quality. Small fur skins of low market value, however, can be tanned for home or country use, according to directions given in the bulletin, a copy of which may be obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, as long as the supply lasts.

Moderate Pruning Each Year Will Help Cherries

Probably there is no commonly grown fruit tree that is so little pruned as the cherry, unless it is the quince. This is not viewed as neglect by the fruit growers but rather as an unnecessary operation. It is partly due also to the fact that the cherry is likely to throw out a mass of gum wherever the bark is injured or mutilated. But as a matter of fact, the cherry will respond to a moderate pruning, just as does any other fruit tree.

When the centers of the trees become thick and the twigs and branches throughout the inner area of the trees are seriously shaded it results in unfruitful and dying branches. Also, what fruit is borne is likely to run small in size. It has been observed that cherry trees (both sweet and sour) which are left unpruned and underfed are likely to produce spurs which are irregular in their bearing.

For proper functioning of the cherry tree it is necessary to have good light conditions, and any impairment of the foliage weakens the tree. It is well known that the cherry tree should be planted very early in the spring or else late in the fall, so that it becomes established as soon as possible. This is partly due to the dependence the tree places upon the leaves as soon as they are put out.

Therefore the cherry tree, contrary to popular belief, should be given a moderate pruning each year or every other year, opening up the tree so that light can penetrate to all parts. This applies particularly to the trees which are found in the door yard of so many city, suburban and country homes.

Cows on Scant Pasture Need Mixture of Grain

Whether or not to feed moderate amounts of grain ration to producing cows on pasture is entirely a matter of judgment on the part of the feeder. Wise dairymen will play safe and add an inexpensive grain mixture, especially late in the summer when pastures are dried down. Cows that are dry will benefit to a great extent by this plan, care being taken not to pile up excess flesh beyond the acceptable condition for dairy cows due to freshen in the fall. In any event the ratio of grain to correspond with a milk flow is much less under average summer conditions on pasture than for winter stable feeding. High producing cows, or cows due to calve in the fall, should not be allowed to get into a run-down condition, and so the short pasture season is a critical period in the year's cycle.

On ordinary pastures oats with corn or barley will furnish the bulk of the grain mixture, but when pastures get short one must reckon on adding bran and oilmeal in limited amounts.

Feeding Screenings Is Most Harmful Practice

If you buy screenings for the chickens it does not pay to feed them over a large area that may be used for gardening. The screenings may bring you the finest collection of variegated weeds that your garden has ever grown. It also pays to use precautions in the scratch feed that is scattered on the range for young stock. If the mixture contains weed seeds a lot of the weeds may be left on the range to cause future work of eradication.

Through a Sieve Woven Finer Than Silk

Raw materials of which portland cement is made come out of the ground usually as solid rock.

They must first be crushed, ground and reground until at least 85 per cent of the resulting powder will shake through a sieve that will actually hold water.

This sieve is considerably finer than the finest silk fabric. It has 200 hair-like bronze wires to the inch. That means 40,000 holes to the square inch.

But the several crushings and grindings necessary to reduce solid rock to this extreme fineness are only the beginning of cement making.

The powdered materials must then be subjected to intense heat for several hours in huge rotary kilns. Here they are half melted and become a substance much harder than the original rock—clinker, it is called.

Then the clinker must be crushed and ground until at least 78 per cent of the resulting product will pass through the sieve woven finer than silk. This is portland cement.

More than 80 power and fuel consuming operations are necessary in cement making. The electric power alone used in producing a barrel of portland cement would, if purchased at usual household rates, cost $1.70.

Few manufactured products go through so involved or complicated a process as portland cement. And it sells for less per pound than any comparable manufactured product.

W. E. MARTIN, Prin.

W. H. WHITE DIES

Last Sunday morning the spirit of Mr. W. H. White, after a sojourn of 80 years in this world of changing vicisitudes, peacefully wended its way back to the God who gave it.

Mr. White was the father of Mr. W. T. White, a prominent citizen of the Isabella community, and lived out in that neighborhood. He came to our county some years ago from near Rockford in Coosa county and his attachment he felt for the old home was so great that he arranged with Undertaker Martin two years ago to carry him back and bury him at his old home church, Poplar Springs, when death finally claimed him.

Mr. Martin lived up to his promise and on Monday he carried the remains back to the old home church and Rev. D. S. Martin, his former pastor said the last sad words that committed his body to the grave and his spirit back to the God he had loved and served so long.

He is survived by a wife and six children, three boys and three girls and is sadly mourned by them, as well as by a host of friends he won during his long career as a true christian, an unfailing friend in adversity as well as prosperity, and as a true and upright American citizen.

The Chilton County News joins its sympathy to these sadly bereaved relatives and friends.

NEARING COMPLETION

The new church building being erected by the Christian church here on north 6th street is rapidly nearing completion.

While it is a frame building it is a splendid edifice and is an added ornament and a credit to our town and to the good people who are having it erected.

It is large and roomy and will accomodiate a big audience.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE AT JEMISON

Rev. Dannily will be here on next Sunday to hold conference and is expected to fill the pulpit at both services.

The public is invited to come out and hear this able man of God.

A DISSAPOINTMENT

After having made all arrangements for a grand Masonic laying of the corner stone at their elegant new church on Monday, Oct. 8, Dr. Wilkerson received a letter from the Marble Works Monday stating that it would be impossible for them to deliver the stone by that date.

In consequence, the exercises will have to be postponed until a future date, but will be carried out at the earliest possible time.

Dr Wilkerson says he will not depend on the other fellow next time, but proposes to have the stone on hand before he makes the next arrangements.

A VIVID BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Mr. R. P. Mills, of Billingsley, was in our office Monday and gave us the particulars in regard to the manner in which he celebrated a part of his 80th birthday that are startling in the extreme.

He went out in to his horse lot and was doing a little cleaning up when the barking of his Shepherd puppy attracted his attention. Upon investigation he discovered a monster rattlesnake in the lot and proceeded to give battle at once.

After the dust of the conflict had settled, with Mr. Billingsley as victor, he measured the snake and he was 5 feet in length and had 12 rattles.

With the same grit and fearless determination that carried him through the civil war this brave old veteran never called for assistance nor gave any alarm, until, at the end, he called his wife to come and view his conquest.

For a man 80 years of age this is some wonderful feat, but those old veteran of the 60's are used to taking any kind of odds and fighting their own battles.

CONGRESSMAN JEFFERIES WRITES

Chilton County News,
Clanton, Ala.
Dear Sir:

I take this method of notifying your readers that I have now returned to Washington. I hope you will give this letter space in the next issue of your valuable paper.

I want to say to the people of the district that I thoroughly enjoyed my stay during this summer in the district. I feel that it has been a great help to me and will prove of much benefit to me in my work here to have again been in direct personal contact with the good people whom I have the honor to represent. I did my best to see just as many of the people of the district as I could in the time I had, and my only regret is that it was not possible for me to have had the pleasure of seeing even more of my constituents that I did see.

When any one has anything which they wish to take up with me I hope they will feel perfectly free to write me direct about it. I will be very glad indeed to have the privilege of rendering to the people of our district every proper service which is within my power.

To reach me promptly mail should be addressed to me at Room 312, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Thanking you for this courtesy, and with best wishes, I am

Yours very sinverely,

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Governor Walton Wins a Bloodless Victory Over Oklahoma Legislators.

TROOPS PREVENT SESSION

Germany Surrendering in the Ruhr, Bavaria Revolts and Establishes Dictatorship—War Minister Gessler Made Dictator of Entire Country to Meet Crisis.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

"CROMWELL" WALTON and his troopers won a bloodless victory over the legislators of Oklahoma who wanted to assemble in special session for the purpose of investigating what they term the mistakes and illegal actions of the governor. Sixty-two members of the lower house attempted to convene in the state capitol Wednesday, and were driven out by the military. They offered no resistance, but at once prepared a petition to the Supreme court for a restraining order prohibiting Adjutant General Markham from interfering with the sessions of the legislature. They contended that they already were legally in session. Asked whether he would prevent such action by the Supreme court, Governor Walton said that would depend on the advice of his lawyers, who number fourteen. He added that there was no way by which the governor of Oklahoma could be removed except by appeal of citizens to federal courts or to congress.

On Thursday the governor extended absolute martial law over Murray county some of whose citizens had asked for protection from the Ku Klux Klan. He said martial law in the state would continue "until the klan gangs and newspapers get off my back and give me a chance to clean up the courts and the county from klan influence."

There wasn't a ghost of a show for the "rebel" legislators. They signed the call for the session and filed it with the secretary of state, and then proceeded toward the legislative chamber. There in front of the doors was a line of National Guardsmen through which they could not penetrate. Assured of a quorum, C. S. Brice, speaker pro tem, directed the clerk to call the roll in the lobby. Immediately Colonel Key, in command of the troops, read Adjutant General Markham's order directing the members to disperse, and told the soldiers to start them moving and keep them moving until they were outside the capitol. The legislators later tried to meet in a hotel room for a conference and found it guarded by gunmen who, the governor admitted, were on the state pay roll and working for him.

Campbell Russell, a former state officer, was arrested for circulating a cartoon depicting Walton as a dictator, and newspaper photographers who tried to get pictures of the scenes at the capitol also were taken into custody.

It must not be supposed that Walton and his immediate supporters are alone in their fight against the "invisible empire" in Oklahoma. When the governor called on the people of the state to be ready to join the militia if they were needed to enforce his orders, it is said 35,000 men volunteered for service. Most of the newspapers are against him because of what they consider his unwarranted assumption of dictatorial powers. So far the national government has taken no part in the fight, merely sending the warning that federal buildings could be used only for federal business.

GERMANY surrendered again last week, and thereupon two more dictatorships sprang up. Having received the assurance of support from the premiers of all the German states, President Ebert and Chancellor Stresemann announced that passive resistance in the Ruhr and the Rhineland was officially abandoned. First reciting the circumstances of the French and Belgian occupation, the proclamation [illegible] said:

"The former occupation of the Ruhr and the Rhineland ceased and the economic life in occupied and unoccupied territory was disorganized. It is most serious to be feared that should the same line of action as hitherto be proceeded with, the creation of a regular currency, the maintenance of economic life, and existence itself would be impossible for our people. In the interest of Germany's future, as in that of the Rhineland and the Ruhr, this danger must be removed. In order to preserve the life of the people and the state we are today faced with the dire necessity of relinquishing the struggle.

"It depends on the powers which have invaded our territory and on their allies by adhering to this idea to give peace to Germany or to bring about by rejection of this peace all the consequences which would ensue with respect to the relations between peoples. We invite the German people to stand closely together in the days of dire moral and material strife which are to come. Only thus shall be frustrated all projects for dismemberment of the reich, and the nation recover its honor, life and liberty, which is its imprescriptible right."

Supplementing this, the chancellor told a gathering of newspaper men that if France refused to show mercy and made a second dictated peace, he would as a last extreme break off all relations with the allies and let come what will, even though the allies march upon Berlin and occupy the whole of Germany by military force.

The first reaction to the surrender came in Bavaria, the center of monarchism. The ministerial council of that state met, listened to Premier von Knilling's explanation of his support of Stresemann's policy and swiftly discredited him. It then named Gustave von Kahr, former Bavarian premier, as dictator and declared the German constitution set aside so far as Bavaria was concerned. Among the laws definitely announced suspended are all those guaranteeing freedom of speech, press, assembly, telephone, telegram, secrecy of mail, secrecy and sanctity of person, dwelling and property. Habeas corpus is declared nonexistent.

Herr von Kahr is vested with powers to call troops and use troops, arrest any one he chooses, keep prisoners without trial and seize the property of any one he declares an enemy of the nation. The ministerial council also issued orders placing the railroads at the dictator's disposal, declaring all officials subordinate to his will and that his orders are higher law than the laws of the national German government. It was announced that there was no appeal from his decisions.

Stresemann at once called an extraordinary session of the cabinet in Berlin and it was decided that the national government would not recognize the Bavarian dictatorship and would oppose it with all the means in its power. President Ebert then proclaimed the existence of "extraordinary conditions" and appointed War Minister Otto Gessler military dictator, giving him practically complete executive power. A decree was issued restricting such constitutional rights as freedom of the press and the right of assembly, and authorizing domiciliary searches and seizures.

If the opportunity seems ripe, Von Kahr may be expected to restore the monarchy in Bavaria with Crown Prince Ruprecht on the throne. In this he might be opposed by General Ludendorff, who is a pan-German, and perhaps by Adolph Hitler, head of the Bavarian fascisti.

Of course the Communists are trying to take advantage of the mix-up but so far they have made little progress. That they are receiving arms and other aid from the Russian soviet government has been proved by the Berlin authorities.

BULGARIA'S communist revolution kept on "revolutioning" last week, and at this writing the outcome of the struggle is altogether uncertain. The latest reports said King Boris and Premier Zankoff had left Sofia, where fighting was going on, and that nearly 20,000 communists were advancing on the capital from the north. The war office announced that the decisive battle in the uprising was being fought in the city of Ferdinand and the nearby village of Berkowitz where the communists and their agrarian allies were surrounded by government forces. The rebels are armed with rifles and machine guns supplied by Russia.

ITALY has evacuated Corfu according to promise, but first Premier Mussolini compelled Greece to pay the 50,000,000 lire indemnity for the murders at Janina without waiting for the apprehension of the assassins. On the demand of Mussolini the council of ambassadors ordered this payment. Lord Crewe, the British ambassador to France, held out as long as he could, but stood quite alone in the council.

PRESIDENT PRIMO RIVERA of the Spanish directorate and his able assistants are putting into effect reforms that bring joy to the people. Thousands of grafting politicians and superfluous office holders have been dismissed; the cost of living has been reduced and profiteers are being punished; banditry is being ended by court-martial and prompt execution; syndicalism and its terrorism have been abolished.

It is understood in London that the proposition to swap Gibraltar for Ceuta is being seriously considered by both the British and Spanish governments.

DISASTER and death attended the international balloon race for the James Gordon Bennett trophy which started from Brussels, Belgium. The aeronauts ascended during a violent storm—the rules of the contest forbidding postponement—and half a dozen of the balloons were destroyed by lightning and collisions. Five of the balloonists were killed, including Lieuts. R. C. Olmstead and J. W. Choptaw of the U. S. army, whose balloon was wrecked by a bolt of lightning in Holland. The race was won by DeMuyter of Belgium, winner of last year's contest.

FULL responsibility for the catastrophe in which seven destroyers were lost on the California coast and 23 members of the crews perished was assumed by Capt. E. H. Watson, commander of the squadron, in his testimony before the naval court of inquiry. He admitted that the east turn was made by his order, and that he took no soundings. The commanding officer of the Delphy, which was leading the squadron, admitted the disaster was due to an error of judgment, but thought a contributory cause was the unusual northerly current near Point Arguello where a southerly current was to be expected.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE believes he has devised a way for the government to help the farmers. In a report to President Coolidge he recommends the establishment by the government of an agricultural export commission or corporation with broad powers. He does not suggest details. Mr. Wallace reiterates his opposition to government price fixing of any one crop, and expresses the opinion that while the buying and holding of a large part of the surplus wheat might be of temporary benefit such action also would make conditions worse unless production of the crop could be controlled.

As part of the effort to stimulate exports of wheat Secretary Wallace declares there should be a reduction of at least 25 per cent in freight rates, and that the entire structure of freight rates should be analyzed.

HENRY FORD has disappointed the South and many of those who have been booming him for a presidential nomination. He seems to have lost interest in his proposal to take over the government's water power plants at Muscle Shoals, Ala., with a view of developing a great industrial center there. His present apathy is brought about by the fact that the government, compelled to act promptly in the matter of the Gorgas steam plant down there, sold it to the Alabama Light and Power company. Mr. Ford had not come forward with any modification of his original offer that would include the Gorgas plant. President Coolidge believes the project should be as attractive to Mr. Ford as it ever was.

Keeping Faith

In the first of a series of advertisements now appearing in newspapers of the State, we expressed our desire—

" * * to create a closer relationship between our organization and the public which it serves; to promote and foster a better understanding of our activities and their effect upon the economic and industrial life of Alabama; and to develop a more pronounced spirit of co-operation in the upbuilding of our State."*

Before publication of these advertisements the people of Alabama, as a whole, were little acquainted with the purposes, scope and activities of the Alabama Power Company; and there were some inclined to be skeptical as to the sincerity of our purpose to "Tell the Public."

Throughout the State this advertising has created much favorable comment. People are becoming more acquainted with the plans and operations of the Alabama Power Company—they are becoming convinced that the Company is carrying forward a progressive program of development in a clean, above-board and constructive manner. The marked change in public sentiment toward the Company is sure to redound to greater achievements and a greater State.

We owe it to more than 6,000 Alabamians who have invested more than $10,000,000 in our securities, and to more than one million people of the State who are directly affected by our service, to keep them informed as to their Company's activities, ambitions and purposes.

That we may continue to merit the good will of the people of Alabama, that it may be the means of making ours a greater State, it is our purpose at all times to keep them informed regarding our activities.

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups.

CHAPTER IV

The Old Sea-Rovers Awaken.

At midnight Captain Sazarac turned from the rue de la Levee to the broad pavement that skirted the Place d'Armes, and, for a moment, contemplated the changes which even the few years of the American occupation had wrought in the Paris of the New world. A painted iron palisade with ornate grill gates enclosed the square before the cathedral which he had known as a dusty parade-ground over which lazily flapped, now one, now the other—the royal standard of Spain or the fleur-de-lis of France. A portion of the ancient wooden gallows still remained, but about it, now, the children played of mornings, listening to the fearsome tales of Bras Coupe, the terror of the swamps, who preyed on human flesh and was proof to musket balls, as the colored nurses had it.

In the narrow way between the cathedral and the old Spanish calaboza the exile paused again. Documents of court and edict were tacked to the wooden doors. Not so many years agone had not he—Jean Lafitte—sent his men up from the pirates' fortified refuge on Grand Terre island to bribe for the escape of his brother, Pierre, from this same prison? And time and again had they not both laughed to read, on these same boards, the city's proclamation for their capture—the law's futile fury when no man durst lay hand upon them, so completely did the Grand Terre adventurers awe the town?

"How many changes!" mused the wayfarer. "Hailed by the city as a hero, pardoned by the President and acclaimed for service to the new republic—denounced again and driven from the seas! Yet I walked these streets when no merchant was too proud to traffic for the goods we brought from the gulf privateering. And again the good sea calls—again, again!"

At a small door in a high wall of the rue St. Peter, he tapped with his sword hilt. It opened; he stood within the small garden of the Cafe la Veau Qui Tete. A dim light showed the wine runs in the warehouse shadows.

Old Dominique, the worthy alderman, lifted a huge pewter mug in greeting. Half a dozen figures arose with smothered exclamations. They were about him, clasping his hands, whispering joyously.

"Thou—Captain Jean!" came a hoarse voice in the old patois of the coast islands. "Here are we all—ghosts, indeed, out of old days!"

"Johanness! Old brawler of the ports! I heard they had hanged you for the loot of the Santa Off Grand Isle."

The huge seaman laughed his joy. "And thou! That the British sank thee off Galveston! Hang me? Ah, no!—the President's pardon, Jean! I—shame to say—peddle ducks and deer in the city markets. The very children point me out and put their fingers to their noses: 'Old Tete John,' they call me—I, who sailed with thee!"

"Better for you all than swinging at yardarms. Here is the worthy alderman; Beluche, with a lawful commission; Nez Coupe, still a fugitive in the deep swamp, I am told. And here, Monsieur de Almonaster!"

"Eh, well—" grunted Johanness. "Dominique brought the gentleman. D—n gentry, say I. Dominique fears to whistle lest it hurt his politics."

"We are, indeed, respectable," smiled the captain. "Only last year, I am told, my brother, Pierre, now a planter of St. James, was second to Monsieur St. Geme in a duel—that is getting into society indeed, gentlemen!"

"Pouf!" grunted Dominique. "Four inches off my belly and I'd be at sea again. Only today I argued with the mayor, Rouffignac, that the city was better off when it fattened on the privateering. Was it not equal robbery when the Americans under Commodore Patterson looted our Grand Terre warehouses?"

"We should have fought instead of scuttling out—" grumbled Johanness. "The Yankees could not have taken us by storm. Glad they were later to have our fellows aid them. Who did General Jackson turn to but Captain Jean's skilled artillerymen when the British threatened the city? Bah! I never saw such a lame lot of dogs as our fellows were the day the pompous governor announced we were all recommended for a pardon! We stood dangling our cutlasses, listening to lawyers' speeches praising us for saving the city, when we should have been to sea again. Captain Jean, thou wert the only wise one of the band—departing to the Texas country and seizing Galveston island against the Spaniards. I could curse my heart that I did not enlist again with thee!"

"I intended to have the new establishment legitimate enough," murmured Lafitte, "but after the war the politicians lost no chance at Washington, nor with the Spanish viceroy at Vera Cruz, to poison all minds against me. When they sacked Galveston, I took young Bowie and went inland to the Santa Fe. That was my history since, comrades. I came back from the West, drawn by I know not what to tread these streets again."

The old buccaneers watched his calm face in the moonlight. He had taken off the hat and peruke; a bronzed handsome man with dark eyes tinged with melancholy—such was Lafitte.

"Eh, well," grunted old Dominique, "Pakenham would have taken the city in the rear if you had accepted the bribes the British offered you at Barataria. And in turn what have the Yankees done for you, Jean—scattered your fortune to the winds!"

"Aye, You Enriched This City, and You Stand a Fugitive Upon Its Streets!"

"Aye, you enriched this city, and you stand a fugitive upon its streets!"

The captain raised his hand gravely: "I—am a citizen of the United States, gentlemen. Proscribed, just now, it is true—but—it might be I could serve again. There are curious things reported in the Mexicoes, Colonel Travis, I recall, and Crockett—and young Bowie were hot for me to join the Texans in a new republic. And in Kentucky—"

"Ah, but, my captain," growled old Johanness, "what hast thou to do with their miserable politics of the day? The sea for us! D—d be this gabble of the town! Look you, what it has made of Dominique!—sitting, twiddling his thumbs on his fat belly! And Beluche—taking off and putting on his gilt chapeau, ticklishly, as if fearing to get dust on his gewgaws!"

"Cease your spewing," growled the Cartagenian, "I sail with proper commissions, I would have you know, from Colombia."

"And be d—d with your papers!" roared the old man. "Admiral? There does not live one for me!—nor councilors, nor nobility—young sprigs of dandies coming to pat our hard salted fists!"

He glared about, his gaze lingering on Count de Almonaster.

"Old man," said Raoul quietly, "you had better keep your place."

"D—n!"

The old sea dog was starting up; Lafitte laughingly laid hands upon him.

"Sit down, old tar-ears! I shall be pardon for you. I know—I know! Old days—old ways—it is hard to put things by." He put his hand affectionately on Johanness' shoulder. "Do you remember the time I sent you with the eight-oared barge to conduct Mr. Grymes back to the city—after the feasting, roaring week at Grand Terre?"

"Aye," interrupted Beluche, "the famous attorney who defended you and Pierre in the first indictment they issued against you for piracy!"

"And you sent word, captain, that if the lawyers wished their fee they must come fetch it from our fort at Grand Terre. The city wagered that Grymes would never return alive, but do you recall the week he ventured? The feasting, dancing, the drinking until the skies rocked, all in our guest's honor!"

"Aye, and me—" Johanness beat his hairy chest; "I, the bo'sun. It was, to whom Captain Jean intrusted the lawyer on the return. By the river we came, eight armed fellows pulling the barge and roaring chanties! At every plantation wharf we stopped, the advocate breaking bottles of the finest vintages o' Spain and shouting greetings. And on the deck, piled in the sun, forty thousand dollars in gold where all might see! Every gentleman's house from English Turn to the city gate must be routed out that Mr. Grymes could gamble against his hosts, so that, when our villains finally haled him into town, not a dollar did he have left of all his fee. E-oh!—even now they talk of it! Not in all Louisiana such princely hospitality as the famous attorney found in the house of Lafitte, the pirate!"

"Old man," smiled the leader, "I never liked that word!"

"I know. That is all I ever held against you, Jean! I recall the day you shot Gamblo through the heart for boasting of a bit o' blood he let. You were ever a bit finicky for some o' our po'cas'le scum, but I swear they loved you, Jean!"

The adventurer looked at the grim faces about the table. The silent Beluche, the complacent Dominique, the hairy bo'sun; and then the slender elegance of the Count de Almonaster. And to him he spoke gravely.

"You are hearing much, young sir. The city sleeping, and these old comrades creeping by stealth to greet me here."

"I've heard the old tales. I've dreamed—" he laughed slightly. "These are dull days. The gallants of the town at their ecarte, or projecting some gentleman's masquerade, or dancing attendance at the opera. They boast of making a little Paris of New Orleans; but who, Monsieur, wishes a little Paris after knowing the big one?"

"Your modesty, sir, is refreshing, after these town gallants who make one trip to the Oaks, receive a rapier tip in the arm, and the rest of their days deem themselves bravos who have the ladies in a flutter."

"I have been twice abroad," said Raoul. "I saw a bit of pistoling in the Indies during the blacks' revolt. And there, among a shipload of refugees, I met the affair that sobered me—made a man of the boy, Monsieur!"

"A woman," smiled Sazarac.

"A child. I fought for her in the flames of her father's house. When I lay wounded they sent her away, orphaned, in the ship captain's charge." He laughed: "That is all—a trifle of adventuring to Jean Lafitte!"

"Bah!" growled Johanness, putting back his long gray hair: "Women! Then, seeing the figure on the bench that had snored the hour through, he forthwith kicked this hard couch from under it. An uncouth disheveled man struck the stones, rolled over and cursed them all.

"Jarvis!" growled the bo'sun. "He has seen more than you, Monsieur de Almonaster, and he has never handled a pistol in his life!"

"Jarvis?" Sazarac started back. "You did not tell me!"

"He is utterly drunk. We did not dare tell him in a public place because of his clattering tongue. Ho, Jarvis! At the drink again!"

The profligate staggered up, rubbing his eyes. "D—n! Old rumbleads, mulling away of Barataria days! Of Jean again—" He broke off staring: "Do I dream—still in the liquor!"

"It is I, Jarvis. Come, clear your eyes!"

Jarvis reeled forth. "Jean, whom I painted at the famous Isle! Jean!"

"Not so loud," grunted Dominique. "I hear the watchman whingwhanging down the street."

"Jean!" The two friends were greeting fondly. "Jean! I knew you lived, Jean of the Petral—my hand upon him!"

"And what have you done with your genius, lad?"

"I have learned to drink," retorted Jarvis, "drink and debt. Into jail and out again. Betimes I belabor Dominique for a dollar. He gives it with fatherly advice, and hales me to Pere Antoine for reformation. Between the alderman and the priest I am utterly lost."

"A pity," murmured De Almonaster. "The best families would befriend him, but he is oftener in the gutter than elsewhere."

"This week the sensation is choosing the crew to man the Napoleon ship."

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 7

ABRAHAM, A BLESSING TO THE WORLD

LESSON TEXT—Gen. 12:1-3; 18:17-18; 22:15-18

GOLDEN TEXT—"In Thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 12:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Being a Blessing to Others.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Man Who Became a Blessing to the World.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Abram, a Religious Pioneer.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Abraham, a Religious Pioneer.

I. Abraham's Ancestors (Josh. 24:2, 14.

Abraham's people were idolaters. Very likely as a young man, he himself worshiped idols. Tradition furnishes us with some interesting stories touching his struggle against idolatry. At any rate, his experience was such as to well qualify him to be the head of a people whose God was the Lord. He knew how hopelessly disastrous idolatry was to the morals of a people, and, therefore, would be able to lead them back to God.

II. Abraham's Call (Gen. 12:1, cf. Acts 7:2-3).

God came to him in Ur of the Chaldees and said unto him:

1. "Get thee out of thy country." One is tied to his country with a strong bond. Abraham had lived long enough to have formed strong attachments to his country.

2. "Get thee out from thy kindred." Abrahm was not only to leave behind him his native land, but his relatives as well, even his father's house. Since his kindred were idolaters, he must leave them. Abraham was to become a pilgrim, to be without a home. Even in Canaan, the only land he ever owned, was a burial place.

3. "Into the land that I will show thee." He was not told what or where the land was. He went out not knowing whither he went (Heb. 11:8). While he dwelt in tents during his earthly sojourn, yet "he looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 8:10). And this he was a typical believer called out from his family and country, and renouncing idolatry, he walked by faith, testifying to his and succeeding generations to the faithfulness of God. It costs to obey God, but there is an abundant recompense.

III. God's Promise to Abraham (Gen. 12:2-3; 18:17-18).

1. The Father of a Great Posterity (v. 2). This has been literally fulfilled. He was not to go out primarily for what he could get, but for what he could do. The minister and missionary forget their own personal blessings in the supreme joy of their converts who are the fruits of their labor. No name in all history equals that of Abraham in its honorable influence. His is the name of honor among Jews, Mohammedans and Christians. They all acknowledge him as father.

2. A Blessing to Others (vv. 2, 3). He was not only to become great and to share God's blessings, but to be a blessing to others. He has become a blessing to countless multitudes. This is the prevailing law of the spiritual life—being blessed to be a blessing. Those who respond to this law become the very touchstone of God, so precious that God will bless them who bless them, and curse those who curse them. God makes common cause with His people. So vitally is He one with them that it is a serious thing to mistreat them. To maltreat God's children is to lift the hand against God. No one who goes against Him can prosper. Not only is this so with reference to wilful acts against His children, but neglect or refusal to do good to them. Christ regards all acts for or against them as for or against Him.

IV. God Testing Abraham (Gen. 22:2-18).

Abraham's faith was shown in that he obeyed the call of God and left his land and kindred, but his faith reached its highest point in offering Isaac. For many years, he had waited for the fulfillment of God's promise as to his heir. At last that promise was a reality. Abraham's hope was not the ordinary hope which fills the heart of every father, that his name and work may be perpetuated through his son. A new nation and the world's Savior were to spring up from Abraham through this son. Through this great ordeal, his faith responded enabling him to believe that God would give Isaac back from the dead (Heb. 11:17-19). God tries all His children. The more important, the more severe the trial.

Our City dads are passing some wonderful wise laws these days. Now what we want is to see them enforced.

The man of brains realizes his limitations and keeps silent. Look at Henry Ford.

As we have said before, it requires much more discretion on the part of an editor to know what NOT to print than it does to know what to print.

The public official who even shows a disposition to conceal anything from the public is doomed politically.

The crying need of the hour in the United States is real statesmanship. We are fed up on peanut politicians.

[illegible] to abolish the council [illegible] is going to [illegible] the legislature with many new faces.

[illegible] sentiment is sometimes slow to crystalize but when ever it does you better stand from under it if you don't want to be crushed.

[illegible] and then the Age-Herald takes a shot at "Plain Bill" and the funny part about it is, they score a hit every time.

The kindest thing you can say about Gov. Walton, of Oklahoma, is that exotistic dreams of power have made him crazy.

We [illegible] the evolution editor of the "S[illegible]" to tell us what force was it that has suspended his theory for the past 7,000 years.

[illegible]ything that occured at Ban[illegible] is so perfectly innocent and spotless, why does the state department fight so hard against publicity? Go to it, Davis.

The Supreme court is grinding again now. We are hoping for a little [illegible]tory grist from that mill [illegible] day.

[illegible] always looked upon Judge [illegible] as a very [illegible] [illegible] legislator, but [illegible] for "Plain Bill" during his term of office, we fear he is a misfit as a politician.

Let's change the name of the Alabama [illegible] chair to the Alabama political electric chair. It al[illegible] em.

The Supreme Court of Oklahoma, has called the hand of Governor Walton and told him where to get off. He bowed to the inevitable and crawfished like a real first rate bull[illegible].

Solicitor Davis, of Jefferson county is giving the State Department a run for their money on the question of investigating the Banner mine explosion. Davis is winning the admiration of the people.

We see the positive statement made that Alabama is the only state in the Union that retains the brutal and degrading lash in its penal institutions. Poor old Alabama. She would climb up into the rank of civilization if she had a chance.

[illegible] earthquake shocks have been felt in the United States in the last few days. Here's hoping that Chilton county has no under ground volcanic connections. Cyclones and earthquakes make a fellow feel too small and insignificant.

Harding and his peace conference caused us to junk a large per cent of our navy and now a tipsy commander has junked 7 more naval craft on a Calofornia reef. We should worry. The tax payers can build us a new navy.

Gov. Walton is the whole works in Oklahoma now. He ordered out his little army and prevented a grand jury and court from functioning. He then took his little army and would not allow the legislature to convene and now he has ordered his little army not allow the people of the state to vote any more until it pleases him. We now have a complete monarchy set up within the confines of our great Republic.

HAS OUR SYMPATHY

As the official organ and mouthpiece of the little bunch of misguided people, segregated here in Chilton county, who elect to live out their lives separated from and antagonistic to the preponderant sentiment of the entire section in which they exist, the Union-Banner is forced by the circumstances surrounding its existence, to make some kind of showing pleasing to its constituents.

Under the peculiar circumstances that exist in Chilton county, the embarrassing position occupied by the Union-Banner has its compensation in the financial emoluments that accrue from being in line with the element that controls the finances of the Chilton county tax payer. If the sumptious "loaves and fishes" that fall his way from the table of the taxpayers is a sufficient recompense to the editor for the labored effort he occasionally puts forth for the purpose of inspiring confidence in, and holding together this erratic group, we have no objection. Still, at times, our sympathy goes out to him as we picture to ourselves the hoplessness of his future and the comparative loneliness of his lot. He must be content to waste his best efforts for the sake of a clieutage whose combined efforts can not even cause a ripple in the political sentiment, nor influence, in the most minute degree, the general conditions under which they live.

Last week, in playing up to this little cotorie of followers, it seemed wise to him and doubtless was a sweet morsel to some of his friends, to undertake to lambast the Chilton County News for its efforts to shed a little light of reason in to the minds of a people who persists in a policy which all sane persons realize can never get them anywhere. He quoted us, with great gusto, in certain criticisms of our state government which we made the week previous.

We wonder if his idea of government is that those servants we elect can do no wrong. That is not the democratic view of the matter. We rsserve to ourselves, at all times, the free prerogative of criticism when we feel that the affairs of government are not being fairly and wisely administered. We have never been blind enough to surrender a democratic administration was in power.

Neither have we ever been silly enough, nor fool enough, to condemn the christian religion, the Masonic fraternity, nor any other civil or political organization because an occassional traitor got in to it. Our absolute belief in, and felaty to, the New Testament plan of salvation is not even clouded, although there have been Judus Iscariots connected with it from its very birth and will be, no doubt, until the last trump shall sound.

Neither is our faith shaken in the principles of our government as incoporated in the tenets of the Democratic party, because, now and then, we find a Judus in our ranks.

The absolute right of public criticism is recognized all over this land and is to be expected and should be courted by the honest office holder.

According to the logic of the Union-Banner editor, the national republican party must be doubly damned, for it has been, and is yet, passing through a blistering storm of criticism, by some of its ablest adherents, such as Borah, LaFollette, Johnson and others. Why not turn your guns on your own party awhile if your logic is not lopsided?

NO AUTOCRATS WANTED I NAMERICA

The good people of the great state of Oklahoma, ignored the insane and frantic effort of their would-be-Emperor, Gov. Walton, Tuesday and by a majority of over 250,000 votes, told him where to get off.

This makes us glad that we live in America and indicates that freedom still lives in our land.

Let all of the Walton ilk put this vindication in their pipes and smoke it.

THE EIGHTH WONDER OF THE WORLD

Mitchell Dam the Very Last Word in Hydro-Electric Power Development.

The age we live in will go down in history as an era of wonderful and swift moving accomplishments. This might very aptly be termed the electric age.

Last Thursday afternoon in company with Mr. T. L. Williams we had the pleasure of making our first trip to Mitchell Dam since the days when the first preliminary work was under way. We were especially fortunate to find upon our arrival there, Mr. J. U. Benziger, the clever, genial and efficient general operating manager for the Alabama Power Company for all of this district in his office. Although he is the busiest man we saw, he kindly put aside the great stack of drawings plans and so on that were heaped upon his desk and took us on a tour of this colossal heap of steel and concrete that successfully halts the onward rush of the Coosa river and takes from its wasted waters 120,000 horse power of live and active energy that can, at a moments notice, be harnessed and put to work in the factories, mills, workshops and homes of three great states. The very immensity of this engineering feat staggers the imagination. How the mind of man could conceive of such an enterprise, much less shape his conception into living, pulsating, visible realities is almost enough to make one subscribe to a belief in the geni of ancient mythology.

This Dam is a pioneer in its sphere, being the only one of the kind in the world. It is the accumulated unit of all the good features in other hydro-electric dams, adopting all of their perfect principles and discarding every thing that experience has shown to be either useless or inefficient. In its construction is displayed a daring departure from all other types and a servigable utilization of every yard of substance that goes to make it the most wonderful piece of construction we hace ever heard of.

The interior of the dam is not solid but is a perfect honey comb of passages, hallways and rooms, each one having its specific use and being exactly in the right place for convenience and service.

In the eastern end of the dam are located the offices of General Manager Benziger and his corps of busy assistants. The engineer's offices are also over at that end. Then we find a large room where is located, what we call, the operating room. In this room are found some little devices that register, every minute, the output of juice from each great generator and then another little electire wizard that tabulates the entire output from the three units at work, and the operator can stand in this semi-enchanted place and tell, at any moment, exactly how the great organism is performing or if any accident or trouble has developed in any part of this silent Hercules of power.

Then we entered an elevator and decended 80 feet in this massive structure and when Mr. Benziger opened the door we found ourselves right in the chamber where those 250 ton turbines were silently gathering this 120,000 horse power of energy right out of the waters of the river that have idled away all of this stupendous amount of useful power during all of the ages past. Vertically assending from these turbines rises a shaft of solid steel for 80 feet and on the top of these immense shafts revolves a 125 ton generator that transforms this harnessed force of the river in to the most verile and versatile power known to man. A force so wonderful that it drives our largest manufacturing enterprises, or cooks my ladys breakfast while she sleeps. It moves the traffic of great cities and lights and heats our houses. It washes and irons our clothes and runs the sewing machine for the wife while she rests. In fact it does almost anything for us that we ask of it, and yet for ages all of these blessings have been flowing by us and we did not know it.

A machine shop and a wood shop are also housed in the dam furnished with the very latest machinery for doing all kinds of work in this line. Five passages lead lengthwise through the dam and each constitutes a level distinct from the others, with numerous rooms on each and all of them for a specific use.

One feature that was especially pleasant to us was the elegant arrangements that have been made in this stupendous beehive for the care and convenience of the employees. Near each end of this five story hive of industry are arranged beautiful tile finished bathrooms and toilets. The baths are either hot or cold as you may prefer. The plumbing in these apartments is of the very best. Separate apartments of this kind are arranged for the gentlemen and ladies and an equally handsome bath and toilet has been aranged, widely separated from these others, for the colored employees.

This is not what might be classed as a discription of this magical freak of engineering skill. That would be beyond our power as a narrator, but we have hoped to give you a faint idea of the wonders of this twentieth century stride towards perfection in the line of hydro-electric endeavor.

Another thing that must be very gratifying to all observing people who visit Mitchell Dam is the splendid houses and the many thoughtful provisions that have been made for the comfort and pleasure of all those who work for the Power Company. All of the houses are supplied with the purest of filtered running water and are wired throughout in the very best manner and all of this service is furnished free. An elegant swimming pool has also been aranged and two largemotor excursion boats are soon to be placed on the lake for the pleasure of those who are indentified with the company, either at Mitchell Dam, or any other of the plants of this great company. An excellent hospital, thoroughly equipped has also been constructed to take care of all who may need such attention. Another splendid feature of this modern plant and one that impressed us greatly is fifteen cozy cottages, with water and lights, and all other conveniences for the use of employees from other branches of this great enterprise who wish to take their families along and enjoy their vacation at this beautiful and healthful resort, where all sorts of out door sports can be enjoyed and where the fishing is as fine as can be found anywhere.

The regular employees of the power company are growing more and more like some large congenial family and, with such consideration as is being extended to them by this company, in a few years the company will reap dividends from these lavish expenditures in having around them a class of workers whose faithfullness and loyalty will make their business grow and prosper without hardly an effort.

The picture of wonderland come true represents an outlay, in actual cash of between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000.

Chilton county should be proud of Lock 12 and Mitchell Dam.

We extend our thanks to Mr. Benziger for his courtesy to us on our trip and wish for him and his wonderful work unlimited success.

SWITZERLAND AT OUR DOOR

Thanks to the hospitality of Mr. M. L. White, the editor had the opportunity last Friday of taking an outing that was a wonderful revalation to him the splendid possibilities of our section.

Boarding the car of Mr. White at our office, in about 45 minutes we found ourselves at the lakeside convenient camp house that is nestled in among the rugged hills, in 60 feet of Mitchell Dam Lake and with a public road passing between the house and lake. A spring of sparkling freestone water bubbles out from a towering mountain of granite right near the camp, supplying all comers with a nectar as pure as the dew drops.

The house is fitted up with real beds as comfortable as can be bought, a safe full of all the dishes necessary for feeding a regiment, a kitchen, with a large oil stove and cooking utensils enough to cater to a big hotel The dining room, with dining table and seats, joins the kitchen and is a large screened in porch, commanding a view of the beautiful lake for miles to the south and a birds-eye-view of the massive dam at Lock 12, one mile to the north.

Mr. White, who does nothing by halves, brought out his motor boat and we embarked for a tour by water. Here is where the discriptive powers of an ordinary editor falls down and a real artist and poet is needed to give even an idea of the scene.

As we glided along the view was an ever changing panarama of rugged beauty and poetic vistas. The chasms that split these towering hills of granite would fade away in labrayinths of shade, suggestive of all kinds of ghosts, goblins and moonshiners. A kodak expert could collect hundreds of views out there that will rival the boosted beauty and grandure of the scenic west.

As a paradise for fishermen this lake is destined to be the very last word. During the winter months the hunter can make his wildest dreams come true as he pots wild geese and ducks.

The Alabama Power Company has done and is doing its part towards making this lake a place of pleasure for tourists and campers. You all remember the hundreds of cans of mosquito minnows they planted out there before the water was raised. Well, those minows are certainly on the job and millions of them now are daily drifting about in great schools devouring the larva of the mosquito in every nook where this pest breeds.

Besides that the Poper Company has a motor boat, equipped for the purpose, that makes weekly trips along the banks of the lake and sprays these breeding places with an insectricide that kills out these incipient pests before they can leave the water. In consequence of these precautions, no signs of malaria, have ever developed along this lake.

The half has not been told about this central Alabama Switzerland. Go out and look and be entranced.

Last Longer-Less Adjustment

Buick Four-Wheel Brakes

Buick four-wheel brakes not only double the braking efficiency of the new 1924 Buicks by doubling the braking surface, but for the same reason lessen the wear on each brake mechanism in proportion. Buick four-wheel brakes last longer. They require less adjustment and the linings do not wear down as quickly.

Simple in construction and positive in action, Buick four-wheel brakes give added safety under all circumstances. They are of the Buick external contracting type and each brake has a three-quarter wrap or grip instead of the usual half-way grip.

Buick four-wheel brakes are operated with a slight pressure on the service brake pedal. They act quickly, smoothly and easily.

All 1924 Buicks (both fours and sixes) have these new four-wheel brakes. In addition, the 1924 Buicks embody further advancements in power, in construction and in beauty that make Buick more than ever "the Standard of Comparison".

WHAT FIFTEEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL CAN DO TO MAKE ROOM PRETTY

Room Belonging to Two Virginia Farm Girls.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Club girls are making farm homes more attractive through participating in "Our Own Room" clubs under the direction of the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural colleges. The girls are advised by the club leader as to what sort of improvements it would be wise to undertake, and then told how to go about making them. In the room shown in the picture, belonging to two sisters in Albemarle county, Va., the walls were first cleaned and tinted. Then the floor was carefully gone over. Nail holes and cracks were filled with putty, and then the floor was varnished and oiled. The fifteen-year-old girl who did the room over painted the woodwork ivory white, and also painted her little rocker, for which she made a cretonne seat and pad to match the window draperies.

Learned to Make Several Things.

She learned how to make the crocheted rag rug in club meetings. All her pieces were dyed brown and orange to harmonize with the walls and drapery. She also hemstitched her sheets and pillow cases as part of club work and made the coverlet and bolster slip herself. These are made of unbleached muslin, the edges buttonholed in black, with a butterfly design appliqued in brown and orange. This butterfly design is repeated in the lace curtains at her window.

Example for Others.

The usual result of having one room in a house done over in this way by an ambitious girl is to stimulate the family to see what can be done to improve the rest of the house, particularly the living room and dining room.

MAKING CRISP POTATO CHIPS

With Increased Commercial Manufacture Has Arisen Many Problems —Bulletin Explains.

With the increase in the commercial manufacture of potato chips has arisen many problems, including the question of what varieties of potatoes are best adapted to this method of preparation. The comparative value of several varieties of potatoes was recently determined, therefore, by the bureau of plant industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, and a report of the findings printed as Department Bulletin 1065, Methods of Manufacturing Potato Chips, is now ready for distribution.

The report shows that potatoes must be of proper maturity and starch content to make good crisp chips. It describes the kind of fat best suited to frying, the equipment, recipe, time and degree of temperature for cooking. It also shows the percentage of chips obtained from different varieties and their comparative value for market purposes.

The information given in the bulletin can be used in making chips at home as well as commercially. The value of different varieties of potatoes for other methods of preparation is discussed. For example, a table showing the percentage of loss in peeling can be applied to the selection of potatoes for making mashed potatoes as well as chips.

Copies of the bulletin may be had upon application to the department at Washington.

SPANISH BEEFSTEAK IS GOOD

Pounding meat before cooking is an old-fashioned method of making it tender. While it has the advantage of breaking down the tough tissues, it has the disadvantage of driving out the juices and with them the flavor. A way of avoiding this loss is by pounding flour into the meat, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The flour catches and retains the juices. The department suggests the following method of making Spanish beefsteak:

Cover two pounds of round steak, cut about one inch thick, with enough flour on each side to absorb the juices. Pound the steak until it is quite thin. Season with salt and cayenne pepper, cover with a layer of sliced bacon or salt pork, roll it up and tie with string. Place in a baking dish of earthenware or glass, with a tight-fitting lid. One cupful of milk and half cupful of water are added, and the steak is baked for two hours. It should be basted occasionally. The oven should be medium hot, and more liquid should be added if the original amount cooks away.

When preparing mashed turnips, try mashing two or three medium-sized potatoes with them, and add a heaping teaspoonful of sugar and a tablespoonful of butter. This rule applies to turnips enough to serve six persons.

A MAN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

Doctor R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, was not only a successful physician, but also a profound student of the medicinal qualities of Nature's remedies, roots and herbs, and by close observation of the methods used by the Indians, he discovered their great remedial qualities, especially for weaknesses of women, and after careful preparation succeeded in giving to the world a remedy which has been used by women with the best results for half a century. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is still in great demand, while many other so called "cure-alls" have come and gone. The reason for its phenomenal success is because of its absolute purity, and Dr. Pierce's high standing as an honored citizen of Buffalo is a guarantee of all that is claimed for the Favorite Prescription as a regulator for the ills peculiar to women.

WOMANLY WEAKNESS

Birmingham Lady Took Cardui for Relief of Change of Life Troubles and Says It Helped Her "So Much."

Birmingham, Ala.—"I first took Cardui for that tired, worn-out feeling that comes from being dreadfully run-down," says Mrs. Catherine E. Smith, of 2106 Stout Street. "Twenty-five years ago I was suffering from womanly weakness. . . . I read of Cardui in an almanac, and thought I would try it. I got a bottle and it helped me from the first. After that, during the whole of my married life, I took Cardui when I needed it.

"About four years ago, change of life came on me. . . . I grew weaker and weaker, and was confined to my bed where I laid on my back for days. I was told that only a severe operation could do me any good, and this depressed me very much for I dreaded such an ordeal.

"I remembered how Cardui had helped me for female trouble in the past and I had read of how it had helped other women during the change of life, so one night I told my husband to go to the drug store and get me a bottle. I began taking it at once. From the first dose I could feel myself getting stronger. . . . I continued to take Cardui until I was entirely through this very trying period of a woman's life. . . . Cardui is a wonderful medicine for women. It helped me so much that I gladly recommend it to other women suffering as I did." At druggists.

Grade Accidents Can Be Prevented

Increase Expected Because of Larger Number of Motor Vehicles.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture calls attention to the fact that highway grade-crossing accidents continue to increase. The interstate commerce commission reports that in the final quarter of 1922, 517 persons were killed and 1,710 injured at grade-crossings, an increase of 16 fatalities and 105 injuries in comparison with the same period of the previous year. Similar increases are reported in other quarters.

It has been suggested that an increase is to be expected since the number of motor vehicles and highway traffic is increasing, but this should be the reason for additional preventive measures rather than satisfaction with the situation.

To Prevent Accidents.

There is only one safest way to prevent accidents where highways and railways intersect. That is by a complete separation of the grades by means of subways or viaducts. There has been agitation for legislation in a number of states to require all users of the highways to stop before crossing a railroad track. A few states have enacted such laws. The general application of such a law covering all of the railroad crossings in any state leads to absurdities and unnecessary inconvenience. For example, one of the principal state highways leading west out of Raleigh, N. C., where such a law is in force, crosses a branch line of a railroad running into the state fair grounds. This switch track is used for only a few days each year at the time of the state fair, but under the law all the traffic over one of the principal highways in the state must stop at this crossing 365 days per year.

Temporary Expedients.

Such laws should be regarded as temporary expedients only. Hundreds of branch line railroads carry only a small percentage of the passenger traffic now carried by the main line highway which they cross. If either traffic is to be halted at the crossing it should be the rail traffic. Right of way is given the most important traffic on the railroads. This is a fundamental principle of operation, and this same principle should be recognized by the state in making any laws with reference to stopping traffic at railway and highway intersections. Undoubtedly trunk line railways should be given right of way, and the highway traffic stopped, but branch line railway traffic lies in a different category entirely. The highway traffic over important state trunk lines should not be stopped at branch line railway crossings. Rather, the infrequent trains should be stopped before crossing such highways.

The agitation for stopping highway traffic at railway crossings, however, is having its effect in rapidly crystallizing public sentiment against all grade crossings, and this will lead to the only right solution of the matter, that is, the separation of the grades.

In the construction of federal-aid roads the bureau of public roads has adopted the policy of eliminating grade-crossings wherever practicable, if possible by relocation, otherwise by means of an underpass or overhead crossing and to this end an engineering investigation is made of every crossing and a great many have already been eliminated. Costly structures are required but there is no doubt that the policy has resulted in the saving of many lives.

Cut Sweet Clover for Seed With Self-Binder

Before harvesting sweet clover it is a good idea to take a cutting of hay first. Better seed and a shorter, finer straw will result, which will of course result in less shattering. Cut the sweet clover for seed just as you would oats with a self-binder, and cut the crop just about the time that most of the seed is showing black. There is bound to be considerable shattering, but if you use care in moving the crop considerable shattering will be avoided. Cover the hay rack with a canvas or a tarpaulin and you will be able to save what seed drops off in hauling the straw and seed from the field.

New Diseases of Field and Vegetable Crops

Fifteen new diseases of field and vegetable crops were reported in the United States during 1922, according to the plant disease survey of the Department of Agriculture. Twelve crops were affected. They were carrot, spinach, Swiss chard, lettuce, potato, radish, Chinese cabbage, bean, watermelon, sweet potato, tomato and tobacco. Most of the new diseases appeared in very restricted areas, seeming to be the result of abnormal climatic and similar conditions.

Blight Is Destructive Disease of Bean Plant

One of the commonest and most destructive diseases of the bean plant is the blight. It is a germ disease and difficult to control. The germs are carried into the patch on infested seed and treating the seed with corrosive sublimate is recommended. Spraying with bordeaux will help prevent the spread of the disease.

Potatoes Foremost Among Vegetables

Government Reports Show Farmer How to Sell.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The potato is foremost in value among our vegetables. It is the chief money crop of large areas, an important staple in many others, and is grown for home supply and local markets in almost every farming district. The wise or unwise marketing of the potato crop may easily mean a difference of millions of dollars in the farmers' income in a year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. This is particularly true of the late or main crop of potatoes, which comprises about four-fifths of the total production.

Potato crop and market news supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture includes crop and market reports and summaries of many kinds published at eight field stations located in the prominent shipping sections and at about a dozen market stations, including the Washington office. These reports contain the necessary facts of production, condition, shipment, prices, demand, and quality. By persistently using and comparing reports from day to day and season after season, they become more and more useful in showing the potato holder when, how, and where to sell.

The general condition and course of the market is best indicated by the leading grades of the most important commercial varieties in the largest and most active markets. Among the regular price developments to be looked for in average seasons is a comparatively low price at digging time with some gain as shipments decrease or when winter conditions begin, then several months of moderate ups and downs, and then another swing, upward or downward, with the opening of spring activity. The proportion of stocks held by dealers on January 1 has often proved an indication of the course of the late winter and spring markets.

Interesting Figures on Agricultural Products

The farmer still has use for the multiplication table, despite the ups and downs in the agricultural situation, according to some figures just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. For example, the output of skim milk powder has doubled in the last five years; the number of cow-testing associations has been doubled in the last six years; the quantity of ice cream produced has doubled in the last twelve years; and creamery butter in fifteen years. If whole-milk production continues at the same rate as during the last five years, it will double in twenty-three and a half years and pure bred cattle, if they continue to increase as in the last two decades, will double in thirty years. The population of the United States comes next, having doubled in the last thirty-nine years; the number of milk cows on farms has doubled in the last forty-four years; factory cheese production has doubled in forty-six years; and the average yield of milk per cow, if continued as in the last five years, will double in sixty years.

Three Big Essentials Make Poultry Success

Poultry success is founded on three big essentials. Regardless of the particular specialty in poultry husbandry which one engages in, there are three big factors that control the results. The first is good stock, the second, proper housing, and the third, correct feeding. The three are of equal importance; They are each dependent upon the other. Neglect of one means failure. Poor stock properly housed and correctly fed will amount to little, while on the other hand, good stock improperly housed and fed becomes equally poor. Adhere to all three essentials, use common sense and system and your success will be assured.

Question of Successful Late-Potato Marketing

The chief advantage of the late potato over its earlier brethren is its keeping quality which permits its sale and use all winter and through the early summer the following year, says the United States Department of Agriculture. This involves special methods. The whole question of successful late-potato marketing can be summed up under four heads, according to department workers. They are: (1) Careful planning from planting time to day of sale; (2) full use of crop and market news; (3) good handling, grading, and loading; and (4) readiness to learn from the methods of other potato growing sections.

Not Difficult Matter to Dehorn Young Calf

When the calf is only a few days or not yet a week old, rub caustic potash on the horn buttons. It is well to remove the hair from about the button and apply a little vaseline or lard to the skin surrounding it. Then rub the potash on the nubs until they are raw. Keep the calf out of the rain to prevent the potash from being washed into the eyes and blinding the calf. Repeat the application twice more, allowing enough time between each treatment to completely dry. Be sure not to get the caustic potash on your fingers or on the skin about the calf's horn stub.

DAIRY POINTS

Community Breeding for Improvement of Herds

By community breeding is generally meant that a number of breeders in a community own and use a pure bred sire co-operatively. We read in the Official Record, United States Department of Agriculture, that 75 per cent of the dairy bulls in the United States are either grade or scrub. As long as this condition exists any method by which this high percentage of grade or scrub sires in service may be reduced is worthy of consideration. Community breeding offers a solution to a limited extent at least.

To be successful the bull association should be formed by a very few members, preferably not more than five or six. This association should be confined to a small area, so that the driving distance would not be too great.

The advantages of such an association when it can be efficiently carried out are many. It makes for a systematic and rapid improvement of cattle. Better bulls can be secured by this method and it extends their usefulness in bettering the cattle of the community.

The difficulty is often in finding a group of men who will work unselfishly in harmony. Personal differences should be set aside for the greatest good for the community and the dairy industry. Competent leaders to act as officers are sometimes hard to find. There is also some danger of communicating disease, but if care is taken, this objection need not be a weighty one.

As one dairyman recently said: "Trouble with us, we are all trying to go alone." Co-operation is a good thing so we might take a little trouble in trying to get used to it.—B. W. Fairbanks, Associate Professor, Animal Husbandry, Colorado Agricultural College.

Scours Is Most Common Cause of Calf Troubles

There are a few common diseases of young calves which must be guarded against and treated immediately if detected. Scours is probably the most common cause of trouble. There are two kinds. One, the white scours, is caused by an infection of the navel soon after birth and is almost incurable. The calf is taken very sick soon after birth, the eyes become sunken and the calf dies within a comparatively few hours after showing the first symptoms. The best means of combat is prevention. Disinfect the entire stall and premises thoroughly and disinfect the navel of the calf at birth.

The other is ordinary scours caused by indigestion brought on by overfeeding or giving sour, old or dirty milk or using dirty buckets. This may be prevented to a great extent through careful feeding. The chances for recovery are fairly good if the case is taken in time, but the calf will receive a serious set-back and will likely be undersized for a long time.

Outline of Simple Plan to Figure Silo Capacity

If your cows are fed 40 pounds silage daily for six months they will need nearly 7,500 pounds or a silo capacity of four tons each. In estimating diameter and height, allow each cow 4 or 5 square feet of feeding surface in the silo. Ten cows would require a feeding surface of 50 feet. A silo eight feet in diameter would have a cross section or feeding surface of 50 square feet. For ten cows therefore, a silo should be 8 feet in diameter. Fifteen cows should have a silo 10 feet in diameter (if 29 feet high it has a capacity of 28 tons and if 32 feet high, 51 tons); 20 cows should have a silo 12 feet in diameter. Forty cows will need a silo 16 feet or 18 feet in diameter and about 30 feet high.

Milk Is Excellent Food for Developing Calves

Milk is a most excellent food for young calves as everyone knows, but it is also very important to furnish the young calf with hay as soon as it is two or three weeks old. Legume hays are the best for the youngsters because they are rich in protein and mineral matter. Roughage helps distend the stomach of the calf and thus aids in developing the digestive system.

For the sake of economy the whole milk ration should be changed to skim milk at the end of the first two weeks or such a matter. The change should be made gradually, at the rate of about one pint per day, otherwise digestive disorders are apt to creep in. It is a good plan also to feed a little grain when the change is made from whole to skim milk.

Big Points on Calves.

Remember that the important things to consider in raising dairy calves successfully are: First, cleanliness; second, regular and prompt attention both in feeding and care; third, proper proportion of ration to produce uniform growth.

Knows Value of Sires.

Every good dairyman knows the value of a pure bred sire of good record and what such an animal may accomplish in the way of improving a grade or scrub herd.

Essential to Profitable Farming

The Utility Express Truck $550 Chassis Only f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

Fits any Standard Truck Body

No business can succeed unless its product is profitably sold. Most farms have a fine production department but no sales department. They grow crops and stock bought by buyers who set the price.

One of the chief reasons for this unprofitable situation is the average farmer's poor facilities for moving his crops or stock to the place where he can sell or ship to the best advantage. Because of the time and expense of horse delivery millions of dollars worth of produce spoils annually on American farms. The saving of this waste would, in many cases, change a losing farm to a money-maker.

This low-priced, high-grade, reliable truck was designed as a money-saver and money-maker for farmers and business houses needing fast low-cost haulage of heavy or bulky goods. It fits any standard type of ton truck body. Ask any Chevrolet dealer for price of the style of body you require.

Periscopes for Cars.

English street railway cars, or trams they call them, are double-deckers, with seats on the roof, in most towns. Now they are being fitted with a new type of shaftless periscope for "searching" top decks. Experiments made recently have been successful, and there is little doubt about the device coming into general use. It is a mirror fixed at each end of a car, and, viewed from the stairway, it enables the conductor to see what is happening on deck without having to go upstairs. From the footboard the conductor can always note if there is any movement on the high level gangway as halting points are approached, and thus time is saved and scrambling avoided.

CHANGE OF OFFICERS

The city council of Clanton, in session last night accepted the resignation of Hayses Foshee, as Chief of Police and elected G D Retherford in his stead

Mr Foshee has been at the head of the force for several months and decided now to accept a position as deputy under sheriff Littlejohn.

At the same time the resignation of [illegible] H L. Hawk, was accepted and Mr W H Kendrick was elected to fill the vacancy.

Captain Hawk has been on the police force for quite a long time and has decided to retire entirely from the service and go into some other business. We shall miss Captain Hawk on his rounds and hope he will still remain with us as a citizen. He is not only a fine officer but a capable clerk also.

The two new men are both well known business men of Clanton. Both of them are high class christian gentlemen, prominent in church and Sunday School work, and their selection by the city council seems to emphasize a determination on their part to elevate the moral conditions of Clanton to the highest pitch.

We hope that all of the better element of this entire community will lend these new officers their coporation and aid them in every way possible in making Clanton noted for its high moral standards.

GOT NIGGER ENOUGH

The people up north don't seem to love the negro so well at close range. They are just crazy about him as long as he stays in the south, and shed oceans of crocodile tears over the fearful treatment they pretend to believe he receives at our hands.

In Scranton, Pa., the court recently sent 26 negroes to the pen for 90 days for vagrancy, and added, as part of the sentence, that when they had served out their time, the law would allow them just 30 minutes to get out of town.

The mayor of Johnston, Pa., has issued an order that all negroes and Mexicans who have not resided there for as many as 7 years, must depart at once.

How long will it take for the negro to find out who are his only friends?

CONGRESSMAN JEFFERS HERE

Major Lamar Jeffers, the popular congressman from this district, was in Clanton last week, greeting his many friends here. He went down to the Old Soldiers Home at Mt. Creek, and shook hands with those aged vetrans of the "Lost Cause." He never forgets them.

He was pressed for time when here, but said he could not forgo the pleasure of making a hurried trip around among his friends before he went back to work.

Major Jeffers is really among friends when he comes to Clanton and we are always glad to see his genial face as often as possible. There is not so popular a man ever visits this part of Alabama as our own able and efficient Congressman Lamar Jeffers.

BIRMINGHAM FALL FESTIVAL COMMITTEE

(By Reid Lawson, Chairman.)

Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 1.—Birmingham is making elaborate preparations for entertaining several thousand visitors during the week of October 29th on the occasion of the Annual Fall Festival. Among the features of the event will be exhibits of Birmingham Made Products, which will be displayed in the show windows of the larger stores. These displays will consist of practically every article made in Birmingham, including more than 1100 different items. The merchants also will display in their windows other wares carried in stock by them, two prizes being offered for the best display one for the manufacturer and one for the merchant.

The amusement features for the entertainment of the visitors will comprise musical concerts, vaudeville, theatrical attractions, moving pictures, band concerts, dancing and other features. Visitors who make purchases at the retail stores will be given tickets to one or more of these different performances.

The committee has applied to the railroad authorities for reduced rates to Birmingham during that week.

A Texas farmer of much boll weevil experience tells us that it is a physical impossibility to successfully poison the boll weevil because he sucks all of his living from the inside the cotton where the poison cannot penetrate. We are told by Dallas county farmers that an attempt to poison the weevils will get all the birds. So there you are.

SOUNDS FISLEY

It sounds rather fisley to a little ignorant fellow like us to claim that a great organization like the Alabama Power Company would buy a piece of real estate and invest millions of dollars in improvements on it without first investigating the title and having a warrantee deed made to said land.

It sounds equally "fishey" to believe that the government of this great country would invest money in like hap hazard manner.

This long dormant McCormick claim to a halt interest in that property, to suddenly spring in to life now, after sleeping all of these years, taxes the credulity of the average individual.

On what peculiar foresight did they base their policy of waiting? Why not have collected on this golden egg before? Could they read the future eight years ago and know that the Ford offer would be made and the present situation develope?

The whole thing bears the earmarks of a frame up for the purpose of blackmailing the Power Company out of a million or so dollars.

It is now about time to shoot your straw hats and palm beach suits.

Buick four-wheel brakes last longer. They require less adjustment and the linings do not wear down as quickly.

Simple in construction and positive in action, Buick four-wheel brakes give added safety under all circumstances. They are of the Buick external contracting type and each brake has a three-quarter wrap or grip instead of the usual half-way grip.

LANIER-MULLINS WEDDING

A wedding around which was centered a great deal of interest was that of Miss Maud Mullins and William Hayden Lanier of Tallassee which was beautifully solemnized on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock at the First Baptist church, Dr. S. J. Ezell officiating in his usual impressive manner.

White and green were the chosen colors and the church was artistically decorated in a profusion of palms, ferns and southern smilax. To the rear of the rostrum were trellises entwined with smilax and white chrysanthemums. Immediately over the bridal party was a canopy from which was suspended dainty white wedding bells. Tall wicker vases held fragrant pink rose buds and ferns. Before the ceremony Mr. Percy Pitts and Mrs. Mildred White Wallace sang "Love's Old Sweet Song." Mrs. Jadie Middleton presiding at the piano. Mr. Pitts also sang "I Will Hold You In My Arms."

To the strains of Bridal Chorus from Lohengren the bridal party entered the church led by the ushers, Messrs. Henry Martin, Irby Deramus, C. Ferm Jones and Grover C. Walker crossing at the altar. Next came the groomsmen attending with the bridesmaids who were Leon Mullins and Omar Reynolds and Miss Mary Fuller from Berryville, wearing white georgette and Miss Beverly Hester wearing orchid georgette with trimmings of crystal beads. They carried arm clusters of Mrs. Kilby roses. Mrs. Eric Hart, sister of the bride, was matron of honor She wore a white beaded georgette and carried arm cluster of pink rose buds. Miss Kathleen Mullins, maid of honor, was attired in a green beaded flat crepe and carried a shower boquet of Mrs. Kilby roses. Little Misses Cathryn Hayes and Frances Higgins, lovely in pink georgette frocks carried baskets of rose petals tied with pink tulle preceeded the bride. Dainty little Hilda Hart in a lively frock of green georgette carrying the ring in the heart of a rose acted as ring bearer.

Miss Mullins was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. C. Reese Mullins and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Mr. John Deramus.

The bride wore an exquisite gown of white Duchess Satin trihmed with pearls. Her veil of tulle was caught at the heart with orange blossoms and formed a court train. She carried a bride's boquet of roses showered with valley lilies.

During the ceremony Mrs. Wallace sang softly "My Promise," and the impressive ring ceremony was used. Immediately afterwards a beautiful reception was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Higgins.

After a brief wedding trip the couple will reside at Tallassee where Mr. Lanier holds a responsible position with the Ala. Power Co. Miss Mullins is the daughter of Mrs. Carrie Mullins and her charming personality has won for her a host of friends who regret her marriage will cause her to live elsewhere

NURSE FINDS A PERFECT REMEDY

"From my long experience as a nurse I do not hesitate to say that I consider Tanlac Nature's most perfect remedy," recently declared Mrs. I. A Borden, 425 Pontius Ave., Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Borden is a graduate of the National Temperance Hospital, Chicago, and her wide experience in caring for the sick lends particular emphasis to her statement.

"I have used Tanlac exclusively for seven years in the treatment of my charity patients," continued Mrs. Borden, "and my experience has been that, for keeping the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels functioning properly and for toning up the system in general, Tanlac has no equal. Recently I had a woman patient who could not even keep water on her stomach for fifteen minutes. Six bottles of Tanlac fixed her up so she could eat absolutely anything. Another patient, a man, seemed unable to digest any food at all. Three bottles of Tanlac put him in such fine shape he went back to work. These two cases are typical. My confidence in Tanlac is unlimited."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. Take no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

His Estimate.

"Dad," said the young hopeful, who was thinking of branching out in the world, "what do you think of the chicken business for me?"

"Well," said the wise one, "I dunno, son. It costs a lot to feed 'em. And if you ever start using taxicabs you'll go broke."

The speaker waxed eloquent and, after his peroration on women's rights, he said: "When they take our girls, as they threaten, away from the co-educational college, what will follow? What will follow, I repeat?"

BLACK-DRAUGHT SINCE BOYHOOD

Louisiana Man Attributes His Fortunate Escape From a Serious Epidemic to the Use of Black-Draught.

Holden, La.—"When I was just a boy at home," says Mr. F. D. Roberson, of this place, "my father and mother used Black-Draught, and I found then what a good medicine it was for the liver and for indigestion. I have used it on from then to now, finding it was good for headache, indigestion, bloating after meals, and colds.

"A couple of years ago, every one, almost, around me was having the 'flu.' I took cold and was feeling bad. I thought then I would take Black-Draught. I took a good big dose every night and I can't begin to tell just how much good it did me. I was able to stay up and wait on others, and I believe my good fortune was due to the use of Black-Draught. I wouldn't be without it in my home, for it is the best medicine I have ever used."

By keeping your liver and stomach in good order, you stand in little danger of catching the serious ills that occasionally become epidemics, spreading through town and country.

Black-Draught, is composed of medicinal roots and herbs, finely powdered and carefully mixed in the right proportions to act naturally on the stomach and liver. It has been found to improve digestion, and to relieve constipation in a prompt, safe way.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 14

ISRAEL, A MISSIONARY NATION

LESSON TEXT—Exod. 19:1-6; Isa. 43:9-11; Isa. 45:20-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and an holy nation."—Exod. 19:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Kindness to His People.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Why God Chose Israel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Mission of the Chosen People.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Israel's Missionary Call.

I. Israel's Exalted Position (Exod. 19:1-6).

The descendants of Abraham had now become a multitude and the time had come to organize them into a nation. In order to enable them to see what a wonderful privilege was theirs, God displayed His majesty on Mount Sinai. In His message to them, He gave them a look backward and forward.

1. A Review of Their Past History (v. 4). He reminds them of what He had done to the Egyptians when He brought them out of their cruel bondage, and that His divine care over them had been as that of an eagle over her young. He had not merely brought them out of Egyptian bondage, but unto Himself. God's salvation is not merely deliverance from sin, but a union with Himself.

2. Promises of Future Greatness (vv. 5, 6). On condition of obedience to His voice, and faithfulness to their covenant obligations, He promised them a peculiar relationship to Him. This relationship is three-fold:

(1) The Lord's Peculiar Treasure Above All People. This is the treasure of Matt. 13:44. If this is recognized, the parable is quite clear. Failure to allow Scripture to interpret Scripture results in confusion.

(2) A Kingdom of Priests. "A Kingdom whose citizens are all priests living wholly in God's service and ever enjoying the right of access to Him." In this kingdom there is united sacerdotal privilege and royal dignity.

(3) A Holy Nation. A nation set apart for the work of God. Realizing this, they would be impelled to a standard of living which would be worthy of their high calling. Separation from sin and a positive stand for the right would always be demanded. The failure of this chosen nation is largely the explanation of the world's distress. Had Israel shown the nations the way to go, they would not have gone so far into sin.

II. Israel's Pressing Obligation (Isa. 43:9-11).

1. God's Challenge to the Heathen Nations (v. 9). They were asked to assemble their witnesses to see if they were able to make known the future as God had done through the prophets of Israel. They are either to make good their predictions or to acknowledge the truth as declared by God's prophets, namely, that God is the only God.

2. Israel, God's Witness (v. 10). This nation had been brought so clearly into touch with God, had so many times experienced His mighty hand to deliver, that they were competent witnesses. Not only the nation was a witness, but the prophets from that nation had so many times witnessed and their predictions were so completely fulfilled that the whole world knew that God was the one and only God and Savior. The only way the world can know that God is a forgiving God is through the witnessing of His redeemed people. How sorely this testimony is needed! How miserable has been Israel's failure!

III. Israel's Message (Isa. 45:20-22).

The message which Israel was to give was that God was the Savior of all the nations. Israel misinterpreted and misapplied this message. They claimed Him as their God and denied Him to the heathen. Though they have thus failed and the world is in darkness because of it, one day they shall go to the ends of the earth with it, and the result will be the ushering in of the Golden Age of which men of all ages have dreamed.

1. The Idolatrous Nations Are Invited to Draw In.

2. They Are Challenged to Bring Their Reasons for Worshiping Idols in the Light of the Fact That God the Savior Was the Only God.

3. They Are Given an Invitation to Look Unto God. They were not asked to do something to be saved, but to look to the Savior. Sinners today need only to look to Christ. What a wonderful day when Israel shall declare this message to all nations in the power of the Holy Spirit!

God's Promise.

God hath promised pardon to him that repenteth, but he hath not promised repentance to him that sinneth.—St. Anselm.

Friendship.

Friendship is the nearest thing we know to what religion is. God is love. —Henry Drummond.

Improvement Seen in Sheep Industry

Recovery From Depression Which Struck It Three Years Ago Is Noted.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Rapid recovery from the depression which struck it three years ago is being made by the American sheep industry under the stimulus of fairly good prices, and improved credit facilities, say reports to the Department of Agriculture. Sheepmen generally are optimistic and in good financial shape, and mutton and wool production, though still below normal, is increasing.

Proof that the industry is getting back on its feet is seen in the fact that the number of sheep in this country according to an estimate as of January 1, has increased by 882,000 over the total on the corresponding date in 1922. It is still 243,000 below the 1921 total of 37,452,000, but the rate of increase suggests that the losses of the liquidation period will soon be made up. Officials of the Department of Agriculture do not, however, think that the high figures of the war years will be reached for some time. The peak of the war period was touched at 49,956,000 head in 1915.

Effect of Open Ranges.

Settlement of grazing lands for farming purposes has proceeded so rapidly in the last few decades that it is improbable the United States will ever again be as big a sheep producer as it was in the days of the free open ranges. Countries of sparse population and low-priced lands are best suited to sheep raising, and the United States has emerged from that category. The number of sheep dropped from 63,965,000 in 1903 to 51,482,000 in 1913 largely owing to the diversion of grazing lands to farming. There is room for considerable expansion of the sheep industry from its present position, however, if only as a natural swingback from the extreme depletion it underwent in 1920 and 1921.

The liquidation in that period was the greatest ever known. Flocks were reduced by approximately 12,000,000 head. Income from wool was wiped out, returns from mutton and lamb were greatly reduced, and hundreds of flockmasters were ruined. From so drastic a shake-up, which diminished wool and mutton production far below current needs, some recovery was inevitable. When congress placed a duty of 2½ cents a pound on fresh mutton, ¼ cents a pound on lamb, and 31 cents a pound on wool of clean content, sheepmen were encouraged to build up their flocks again, and a foundation was laid for re-establishment of the industry on a normal footing.

Wool and Lamb Prices Good.

Wool today has a higher relative purchasing power in this country than any other commodity, and lambs are one of the few agricultural commodities that are ruling substantially above the 1912 level.

In attempting to guess what the immediate future holds in store for the American sheep industry, it is necessary to bear in mind, say officials of the Department of Agriculture, that the enterprise has a dual character. Sheep raising involves the production of both wool and mutton, and market conditions for each must be favorable to ensure stability and progress. The wool outlook seems favorable. Americans use more wool than any other people. Per capita consumption has risen from about three pounds in our early history to about 6½ pounds. Although a heavy producer of wool, the country is nevertheless oblized to import two-thirds of its supply. Home producers are therefore assured of a broad domestic market.

Less certainty exists in regard to the market for mutton and lamb. Lamb and mutton are high-priced, and are considered as luxuries by most people. In consequence sheep and lamb prices show greater sensitiveness to variations in general economic conditions than any other important commodities, and in recessions, as well as in advance, have usually preceded other meat products by substantial periods. How to assure a stable and broadening market for mutton and lamb is therefore one of the most difficult problems of the sheep industry. Officials of the department are making studies to see what can be done toward preventing seasonal gluts and shortages, and toward increasing the popularity of mutton and lamb.

Number of Hogs Killed in July Breaks Record

Nearly 4,000,000 hogs were slaughtered during July of this year in establishments operating under federal meat inspection, breaking all previous records for hog slaughter during that month. The exact number by the records of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, was 3,983,435. This number breaks the best previous July record, which occurred last year, by 879,113 hogs.

Bright Soy Bean Straw Is Most Valuable Feed

Soy bean straw, if it is bright and free from mold, is worth more than most straws. At the Ohio station, when the soy bean straw was fed in connection with shelled corn and oil meal, it was found that it was worth about one-third as much per ton as clover or alfalfa hay.

Information Given on American Sumac Crop

Domestic Source of Tannin Never Been Developed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Detailed information concerning the kinds of sumac desired by the extract makers, the proper methods of gathering, harvesting and curing the leaves, and suggestions for improving the quality of the article are given in the United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin 706, American Sumac, A Valuable Tanning Material and Dyestuff. This bulletin may be obtained upon application to the department.

Our domestic source of tannin, the American sumac, has never been properly developed, say officials of the department, although American sumac contains practically as much tannin as the Sicilian variety. However, owing to lack of care in gathering and curing the leaves of this wild plant, which grows in vast quantities on uncultivated land in the eastern and middle western states, the domestic article now on the market is inferior in quality and brings a lower price than the imported article. Sumac is used in tanning light-colored and special leathers but unless the leaves are gathered at the proper time and properly prepared for market, a darker color than that desired will be given the leathers treated with it.

Lime Spreader Is Most Useful Farm Implement

When farmers begin to use lime for sweetening sour soil in order to grow clover they can well afford to purchase a good lime spreader. A lime spreader will pay for itself in spreading a few carloads of limestone because it will enable the farmer to apply the lime much more evenly and to gauge its application more accurately. Only by so doing will he get the maximum return for the money spent in liming.

In addition to this a lime spreader will save a great deal of heavy work that would be encountered in spreading limestone with a shovel or by other makeshift means.

Not every farmer needs a lime spreader because this implement is only used for a short period each year. The plan followed in a number of communities is to purchase a lime spreader co-operatively. A half-dozen farmers can purchase a spreader together and it will involve only a small investment on the part of each. There will be but little difficulty in all of the men using the spreader satisfactorily because limestone can be spread at almost any time.

Chinch Bugs in Silage Render Feed Worthless

Silage corn, when heavily infested with chinch bugs, should not be put into the silo, as cattle will eat little of it. This was the experience of silo owners in chinch bug areas of the state last year. The pungent odor given off by masses of crushed bugs renders the feed unpalatable, resulting in complete loss. Those silo owners who live in the chinch bug infested portions of the state should bear this in mind, as it may save considerable time and work. In case the bugs are not numerous in the silage corn, no harm will result, but where the bugs can be found in masses between the sheath and the stalk it is useless to put the corn up for silage.—A. L. Ford, South Dakota Station.

States Furnishing Big Portion of Potato Crop

The main or late-crop potato region extends from Maine westward to Washington and southward to northern New Jersey in the East and to northern California in the West. Only 15 states are prominent in late car-lot shipments, however. These, arranged according to the average yearly number of car-lot shipments, are Maine, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Oregon, South Dakota and Montana. These states furnish all but a few thousand cars of the main crop shipments. They move from 110,000 to 200,000 carloads and average about 90,000,000 bushels of potato shipments each season.

Time to Cut Sudan Grass When First Heads Show

Crops authorities at the Nebraska Agricultural college say that according to tests the best time to cut sudan grass for hay is when the first heads are showing. When cut at this stage the greatest amount of forage of high feeding value is obtained. There is, however, no great difference in the yield and quality of sudan hay cut earlier or later than this stage as it makes good hay when cut over a considerable period of time. Sudan hay is a little difficult to cure and some care is needed to cure it so it will keep in good condition.

Alfalfa Reduces Need for High Protein Feed

Alfalfa will reduce the need for high protein grain supplements for cows, but it will not entirely do away with it. If you have good silage you can reduce the high protein grain feeds in the ration to about one-third. Bulky feed such as bran or ground oats may constitute about a third of the grain ration and corn chop, hominy feed, or similar concentrates may constitute the balance.

Like Looking at the Sun

Looking into one of the huge rotary kilns where the raw materials for cement are burned into clinker is just like looking at the noonday sun.

The terrific heat required makes a glare of light so intense that the glowing flame would temporarily blind you.

But borrow the workman's colored goggles to protect your eyes while you take another look into the kiln. Then you will see a tornado of powdered coal—or gas or spraying oil—bursting into a sheet of sunwhite flame.

Into the other end of the kiln flow the powdered limestone and shale [clay]—the raw materials for cement.

As the slowly revolving kiln tumbles the materials about, they are subjected to gradually increasing heat. During their three-hour journey through this inferno, moisture and gases are first given off. Finally as the powdered materials reach the sunwhite flame, they half melt into glass-hard balls called "clinker." This clinker, an entirely new chemical compound, when finely powdered is portland cement.

Portland cement kilns consume great quantities of fuel—30 pounds of coal or its equivalent for each 94-pound sack of cement. For the whole cement making process the consumption of coal is approximately 50 pounds a sack—more than half a ton of coal to a ton of cement.

Telling an Alligator's Age.

The width of an alligator's nose between his eye teeth is the means for determining the reptile's age, according to the experts on such subjects. After the reptile is ten feet long the nose widens one-quarter of an inch for each 50 years the alligator lives. Ocklawaha, the largest alligator in captivity, weighs 1,400 pounds and is 13½ feet long. He is estimated to be several hundred years old.

Soldiers' Insurance Problem.

Several hundred men in the army and navy of the United States in the World war named as their beneficiaries for government insurance their parents living in Russia. The veterans' bureau cannot pay this insurance, because we have not the necessary machinery in Russia which would be connected with consular service in that state. It is presumed that the families of these soldiers who have died for their country are in a bad way in soviet Russia.

A Resume of the More Important Events of Interest Condensed To An Eptiomized Form.

Action of the state board of education, taken in December, 1919, providing compensation as executive officer of the board of the state superintendent of education is reaffirmed in a resolution adopted by the state board of education in annual session at the capitol. The many duties of the state superintendent of education as such executive officer is sited, and it is pointed out that on account of these duties and responsibilities, resulting from changes in the educational system of the state and its administration, the compensation was provided for.

With rainfall totalling only .54 inches during the whole month of September, Tuscaloosa has just passed through one of the driest months in her history. September, 1922, saw rainfall measuring 2.02 inches; in 1921, 2 inches, and in 1920, 4.99 inches. With this dry period the Warrior River has fallen to a new low stage for the year of 9.4 feet at Lock 10, which is only one-tenth inch less than it reached in September. This is the equal of the low mark reached last December, and the lowest mark touched this year so far.

Gov. Brandon has issued a proclamation calling on the people of Alabama to lend their support and cooperation to the forces in the state working in the interest of prevention of fire waste. Governor Brandon referred to the fact that the week, October 7-13, inclusive has been designated as national fire prevention week by the president of the United States and called attention also to the loss of 221 lives in Alabama through fire in 1922.

An increase of more than $2,000,000 over 1922 is noted in the total assessed valuation of Jefferson county, according to a report of County Treasurer M. V. Henry. The report sets down the valuation for 1923 at $240,509,426, while that of 1922 was something over $238,000,000. The total indebtedness of the county, according to the statement, is $6,470,458.56, a figure well within the constitutional limit, which is $8,217,829.91, or three and one-half per cent of the total valuation.

Alabama municipalities cannot legally set aside, evade, repeal, modify or nullify the state Sunday closing law, Judge O. A. Steele is expected to tell the Etowah county grand jury, when the body convenes. He is expected to define the law as it refers to cities and to demand that it be enforced. It is understood that the court will take the position that any Sunday closing law passed by Gadsden would be merely an evasion if it does not strengthen or track the state statutes.

Gov. W. W. Brandon has issued orders revoking the paroles of two Jefferson county convicts, Stacker W. Todd, a white man, and Jim Eddings, negro. Todd has been arrested at San Antonio, Tex., on a charge of violating the anti-narcotic law, and Eddings is in jail at Louisville, Ky., charged with breaking into a store house.

Federal Prohibition Officer B. H. Crumpton, formerly a Calhoun minister himself, ran into something entirely new in a raid near Borden Springs when he outran and captured Rev. Joe Knox who he declared to be the owner of two barrels of banana beer which was just ready to turn into brandy when the raiders swooped down on a cluster of nine stills nesting in the hills of Cleburne.

The first exhibition to be given by the gold medal show of the American Poultry association in Alabama is to take place at Bessemer this fall. Arrangements to stage this exhibit of blooded chickens were made at a recent meeting of the poultry division at the Chamber of Commerce.

T. E. Buntin, of Dothan, has been appointed by Gov. W. W. Brandon as judge of the Dothan Court of Common Pleas.

The Jasper Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs have just finished a successful campaign by which they have raised $2,000 for the benefit of the Walker Athletic Field.

Knights of Pythias of Tuscaloosa will make a determined effort for the location in that city of the proposed new Knights of Pythias home for Alabama.

The board of revenue of Calhoun County has passed a resolution imposing a tax of 50 per cent of the state tax on all trucks, tractors and trailers hauling lumber, logs or minerals over roads of the county. Another resolution has been adopted by the board which forbids any truck or tractor carrying a load to travel over a public road when any metal part of the wheel comes in contact with the surface of the highway.

The Madison County Commissioners have suspended the application of the wheel tax on all buggies, wagons and other vehicles as a means of raising additional revenue for a period of one month, during which time mass meetings will be held in every precinct of the county and delegates appointed to appear before the commissioners and advise with them as to what they consider a fair amount of tax.

Farmers state that there will be a bird shortage this season as well as a short cotton crop. Their theory is that many birds ate cotton leaf worms which had been poisoned by calcium arsenate, which killed the birds as well as the worms. Nearly every farmer who had a cotton crop used the poison in combating the worms and there were millions of dead worms for the birds to eat.

On October 2, 1922, middling sold in Selma at 19 1-4 cents. October 3, 1923, cotton of the same classification was quoted at Selma cotton exchange at 28 1-2 cents, one-third advance over the quotation of 1922. Receipts on Selma market October 2, 1922, were 28,900 bales. Receipts to noon, October 2, 1923, were 10,252 bales, practically two-thirds less as same day of last year.

With the passing of the board of tax adjusters of Jefferson county, attention is being called to the work accomplished by the board while in office. During the past four years the board has lifted the assessed values of the county from $180,000,000 to a little over $241,000,000, and it is claimed that this has been done equitably and without working hardship.

Hydro-electric light and power is the chief aim of citizens of Verbena at present. Dr. B. J. Baldwin called together the men of the town in the community house and a committee was organized to incorporate an electric power company and to build a 30 foot dam just below the junction of two streams about one mile east of Verbena.

R. D. Crawford, of Dothan, vice-president of the Houston Power Co., applied to the Alabama Public Service Commission recently for permission to amend his original petition for issuance of a certificate of convenience and necessity for the erection of a hydro-electric power dam on the Chatahatchee River, near Newton, Ala.

Evidence that prosperity still reigns in the Gadsden district was contained in the statement of Postmaster Stephens that the postal receipts of Gadsden increased 10 per cent during the quarter just closed. For the three months ending Sept. 30 the receipts totaled $11,400.06 as compared to $10,261.36 for the same period a year ago. The net gain was $1,138.70.

Visions of mutiny and riot flashed through brains of officials at the Jefferson county jail when 35 or more prisoners made a concerted rush for places of safety following an explosion of a small water heater in the basement of the jail where the prisoners were assembled for their semi-weekly ablutions.

The annual meeting of the Calhoun County Baptist Association convened at Anniston last week for a two-day session. Reports presented during the meeting showed that the past associational year was one of the best in the history of the association.

The large saw mill of Bicket & Fleming, which has been located on Pea river at Flaming's mill site, has been moved to Brundidge. This was done in order to facilitate handling orders by being nearer the railroad.

W. Grady Clark, Sheffield real estate agent, sold an Iowa corporation 300 acres of land southeast of Sheffield at a price said to exceed $160,000. The purchase was made for subdivision purposes.

The membership of the University Glee Club has been elected and Mr. Tom Garner, director, announced the names of those who had been successful in becoming members for the 1923-24 session.

Under the provision of senate bill 417, and signed by Gov. Brandon, the state of Alabama will henceforth carry its own fire and tornado insurance on state property.

The Eleventh Street Church at Gadsden has purchased two lots in the rear of the church and will shortly begin the erection of a fine brick parsonage.

Continued dry weather is injuring the potato pease and cane crop in Coosa county. Water in the Goodwater section is very low. No street lights are available in town owing to the water running to win the municipal electric light reservoir on Hatchett creek.

A Ford car which contained 12 gallons of whisky when captured, according to the officers, is being held by the Anniston authorities, while officers are continuing their search for the occupants of the car, who made their escape.

SHIP FOUND ON BIG ICEBERG

Captain of Steamer Sights Large Mass of Ice Carrying Three-Masted Schooner.

For centuries mystery ships have sailed the seas, guided only by the winds of chance. One of them was found by a steamer captain rounding the Horn recently. While groping his way into the open, a gigantic mass of ice carrying a large three-masted schooner, with its boats still in the clefts, was sighted. Efforts were made to find the survivors, but no trace of them was discovered. Another sea tragedy was added to the already long list of those as yet unsolved when a Greenland whaler came upon a strange looking derelict, battered and weather-worn, apparently built in the last century and ice-bound for years. A boarding crew found in the cabin the body of a young woman, preserved by the Arctic frosts. Near a long-dead fire was the remains of a young man, still holding a flint and steel.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

CHILDLESS HOMES MADE HAPPY

Presence of Little Ones a Great Blessing

Four Interesting Letters

Cortland, N. Y.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was weak and wanted to become strong and have a child. My husband read about it in the 'Cortland Standard' and thought it might help me. It certainly did for I now have a lovely boy fifteen months old who weighs forty pounds. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my friends and you can certainly use my testimonial in your little books and in the newspapers, as it might help to make some other childless home happy by the presence of little ones as it has done mine."—Mrs. CLAUDE P. CANFIELD, 10 Salisbury St., Cortland, N. Y.

A Message to Mothers

Hamilton, Ohio.—"I have known about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound since girlhood, having taken it when I was younger and suffering from a weakness and backache. Lately I have taken it again to strengthen me before the birth of my child, as I was troubled with pains in my back and a lifeless, weak feeling. I think if mothers would only take your wonderful medicine they would not dread childbirth as they do. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to every woman."—Mrs. JOS. FALCOIN, JR., 552 S. 11th Street, Hamilton, Ohio.

Was Weak and Run Down

St. Louis, Mo.—"My mother took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was a girl, and when I was troubled with cramps I took it, and later when I married I again took it to make me strong as the doctor said I was weak and run down and could not have children. I took it and got along fine and now I have three girls. So you know why I keep the Compound in the house. I am a well woman and do my work and sewing too."—Mrs. JULIUS HARTMAN, 2501 W. Discovery of America Cost $7,000.

After a searching inquiry, it has been estimated that it cost $7,250 for Christopher Columbus to discover America. The explorer was paid about $320. Louis Sanangel, a nobleman, and not Queen Isabella of Spain, provided most of the money to outfit the three ships and pay the sailors, who were seeking a new route to Asia, says the investigator. The Pinzons, who commanded two of the ships, were paid $130 each, and a common seaman got $29 for the voyage.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

When All Signed With Cross.

In olden times the signature of the cross, now made by persons who are unable to write, was not confined to the illiterate class. Among the Saxons the mark of the cross, as an attestation of good faith of the person signing, was required to be attached to the signature of those who could write, as well as to stand in the place of the signature of those who could not write. —Detroit News.

To Build New Electric Line

It is reported that an electric railway will soon be constructed from Duluth to the International bridge, and probably extended through to Ft. William, and that the falls on the Pigeon river will be developed to provide power for operating it. The project will require co-operation between the goverments of Canada and the United States, the Pigeon river being an international stream.

Odd Musical Instruments.

The ordinary handsaw has appeared as a musical instrument. One seeker after novelties uses a saw as a violin. After long experience and untiring practice he has actually succeeded in getting an agreeable music from the tool.

He holds the saw handle between his legs, holds the tip of the saw in one hand, and works the usual violin bow with the other. The vibrating steel blade emits soft, appealing notes, the pitch of which is varied by changing the curvature of the blade. All sorts of queer effects can be got by adept manipulation of the blade. Sometimes the music resembles the human voice; again it has the weird wail of the Hawaiian ukulele.

What He Intended.

"My dear," said the newly-married man to his wife, "where did all these books on astronomy come from? They are not ours."

"A pleasant little surprise for you," remarked his wife. "You know, my dear, you said this morning that we ought to study astronomy; and so I went to the bookseller's and bought everything I could on the subject."

It was some minutes before he spoke.

"My dear," he said then, his voice husky with emotion, "I never said we must study astronomy; I said we must study economy."

The methods of a Dictator are not popular, even in Chilton county.

Gov. Walton of Oklahoma, better get his want ad in the paper seeking a job

P. O. Box 186 came out strong for the abolishment of pool rooms in Clanton this week.

Day by day in every way, the moral status of Clanton is climbing higher and higher.

None of the great Power and Telephone Companies can hope to ever compete with the Alabama politician in laying underground wires.

Let us hope that "them days is gone forever" when the will of the people can be flouted by the machinations of any man or set of men.

The most dangerous enemy that any religious, civic, fraternal or political organization can have to contend with is the borer from within.

Gov. Walton of Oklahoma has eaten so much "crow" lately he will probably [illegible] after the legislature gets through with him.

The Democratic party that we belong to and represent to the best of our limited ability, has nothing to hide from the people. We invite the keenest scrutiny and contend for the equal rights and privileges of all.

Our form of government is a triune [illegible] the legislative the judicial and the executive departments, each having its own separate functions and it's a dangerous thing for either one to interfer with the actions of the other.

It is a hard matter to see the evil tendencies of either a civic, religious or political organization but it is a hard matter to find an individual who is willing to rise up in public and call for a showdown. Thus it is that "policy" makes cowards of us all.

In the past the Democratic party of Chilton county has been in the habit of sleeping for 4 to 6 years in the pigeon hole of somebody's desk. If we are going to have a party we must keep it wide awake 365 days in every year.

This is preeminently the day of the grafter. The average politician has ceased to regard promises, pledges, constitutional rights, or anything else except the dollars and cents. Personal greed is the power that makes and enforces our laws now. "The people be damned" is the dormant sentiment.

Any decent foreigner who really wishes to come over and truly assimilate our ideals and teachings is invited to come over and go to work. The hyphenated bunch that want to bring their bolshevik notions along need to be kicked overboard as soon as they land at Ellis Island.

A letter from Senator J. Thomas Heflin, who is now at home at LaFayette, imparts the pleasing intelligence that he will most probably pay us a visit before he returns to Washington in December. The people of Chilton will be delighted to welcome him and personally, we shall look forward to the fullfilment of that promise with a great deal of pleasure.

The Bible tells us plainly that a person cannot possibly occupy neutral ground. We are either actively for or against every proposition. As a Chilton county Democrat in name and a republican in action you are not worth much to either party but you are a mighty liability to the Democratic organization.

We are a strong believer in law enforcement. If a law is bad, strict enforcement of it is the way to make it unpopular that public sentiment will force its repeal. The disregarding of a [illegible] law makes one fell and makes an excuse, or precedent, for disregarding any or all laws. It tends to lawlessness. The vast majority of people wish to be law abiding. The thing to do is to make the [illegible] line up.

ORGANIZATION

Some wise guy said once that "Eternal vigilence was the price of liberty." He knew exactly what he was talking about.

Another Soloman in his day gave utterance to the truism that "United we stand, divided we fall." He was also wise in his generation and said a mouthful. Some other patriot of other days imparted the fact to us that "In unity there is strength."

Then the very highest authority on earth, or that will ever be on earth, said that a "House divided against itself cannot stand."

Now with these truths before us we are going to preach a little sermon to the Democrats of Chilton county.

You have personal experience behind you here in Chilton that it looks like would be sufficient to convince everyone of you of the absolute necessity of living up to the spirit of our texts if you ever expect to accomplish anything.

At the last election you made the best showing you have made in years, and that was solely because a spirit of unity inspired you and you put on a concerted effort to wake up and do something. If you wish to hold to what you have won, "eternal vigilance" will be the price you must pay. You have got to come "out of the crack" and stay out. You have got to stand up for your principles every day in the year, and a few nights thrown in for good measure. The load is never pulled by the firey team that plunges and jumps at it. It takes the old settled team, with a steady pull altogether to carry the load. Put that back in your cranium and figure it out.

Another thing. If you are either ashemed or afraid to be a Democrat you better quit now and join the party that you are not ashamed of nor afraid to belong to. Yes, sir, just that.

We mean exactly that. God deliver us from false friends. Had you ever thought about it? Real politics is not a matter of captious prejudice but the expression of real principles. We are a Democrat because we firmly believe that the principles of Democracy are not only organicly right, but also because they truly embody the spirit of freedom as incorporated in the constitution of this great land. We firmly believe in a government of, by and for the people and in no other party is that principle so broadly inculcated as it is in the fundamental facts upon which the Democratic party is based.

But, like the preacher, we have digressed from our text, so we will take up the two last clauses of our text and hasten to a close.

One of the most fatal diseases that ever attacks any kind of a human organization is, Borers from within. Let a few soreheads or malcontents begin to growl and grumble because the pie failed to go round, or because they could not rule and dominate the entire organization, nor put it in their pockets as an asset to be used only when they and their friends needed it, and right then you have to meet a condition that demands quick and radical treatment. No one man, nor set of men, is big enough to dictate to a free born Democratic electorate.

Watch out for indications of these intestinal parasites, and promptly make use of the proper remedy of elimination.

In conclusion ponder well the Scriptural injunction that a "house divided against itself will fall."

Be true to yourself and true to your party. Organize in every beat and work without ceasing. Be a unit at all times and serve yourself and your county well when you are loyal to your party.

Turn a deaf ear to anyone who attempts to slander the party you profess allegiance to. Cement yourselves together in the common cause and work without ceasing.

Get in the front line trenches and, like our brave boys who put the German hordes to flight, never retreat, but go ever forward, with a united front and victory will perch on our banner in the end.

It is a dangerous thing for even the governor of a state to attempt to impede the orderly processes of the law or to forbid or hamper the investigations of a grand jury.

CITY ELECTION TUESDAY

By order of the City Council, a referendum election was held last Tuesday allowing the people to decide whether or not pool rooms should be licensed in Clanton, and also calling for an expression in regard to whether any pig pens should be maintained within the corporate limits.

The counting of the ballots disclosed a majority of a little over 11 to 1 denying pool rooms the privilege of doing business in Clanton at all

There is only one pool room operating here now, the other one having closed its doors on Oct. 1. The one in operation has a city license until Jan. 1st and, so far as the city is concerned can continue business until that time. The state and county license, however, is due Oct 1st and will have to be paid if the pool room lives out the period of its city permit.

The pig pens also were not very popular with the voters, for the vote against them was a 5 to 1 proposition.

Neither of these laws will become operative until Jan. 1, 1924, thus allowing time for all parties to make such arrangements as they see fit. After the first day of next January the poolroom doors must be finally closed and the pig pen, if you persist in wanting one, must move outside of the city limits.

It was generally conceded before the election that both of these issues were certain to lose and in consequence the vote was rather light, however, the majorities should be convincing of the local sentiment.

1924 CITY TAX

We carry this week an ordinance of the city council fixing the city taxes for the ensuing year.

It should be a pleasing fact to our citizens that the schedule is just the same rate that we have had—no changes.

This is especially gratifying when we look around and see the wonderful amount of permanent improvements that have been made on our streets and in the general appearance of everything.

They are alive to the fact that Clanton has outgrown the methods of a cross roads village and are building with an eye to the present as well as the future.

The Chilton County News wishes to offer its sincere congratulations to our present Mayor and his efficient board of councilmen for the wise, fair and business like grasp they have taken upon the affairs of our town and for their systematic plan of keeping the town up to the demands of its rapidly increasing population.

The citizens of Clanton owe these gentlemen a lasting debt of gratitude for the vast amount of careful work they have gratuitously done for us.

POLITENESS OR "KULTUR," WHICH?

Standing on the Upchurch corner for a short while last Saturday afternoon and observing the movement and behavior of the throngs that passed up and down the street, we could but make comparisons and wonder at the vast social changes that have taken place in just a few short years.

The innate chivalry and politeness that just a few years ago, would unconsciously prompt the male species to defer to and respect the female, to give to ladies all of the sidewalk, to abstain from profane and vulgar language in their presence and, in fact, to show them preference and respect under all circumstances, seems to have passed almost entirely away.

We saw Saturday handsome young men pass along the pavement four and five abreast, talking, laughing, smoking cigarettes and interlarding their conversation with indecent and profane language. Saw them meet ladies on the sidewalk and without the slightest notice force the ladies to take to the curb and in some instances to the gutter.

We wondered what had wrought the change. Is behavior like that in keeping with the modern code of politeness? If so, what caused the utter reversal of form from other days. Have ladies grown less worthy of respect? Has the emancipation of the fair sex and their induction into the realms of a qualified voter anything to do with this new social aspect. Or did the Germans succeed in their campaign of propaganda, in introducing into America their standards of "Kultur" that we heard so much about during the war?

To us, it is a most regretable social condition. We feel like the tendency to cease our respect for our mothers, wives and sisters is degrading to American manhood and its fruits will be disastrous to our country.

SEND US YOUR JOB WORK

COTTON TOO LOW

The government figures on cotton put out this week, in our opinion, are unfair to the farmer. We have no idea that an estimate of 11,000,000 bales is justified by the real conditions. By some means the wrong viewpoint was taken by the experts who figure these things up.

The conditions all over the cotton belt are peculiar this year. There was a vast acreage planted to cotton, but figures based on acreage are bound to be woefully misleading because the yield per acre is not over 60 per cent of a normal crop.

Again, the ginners reports are especially misleading from the fact that to estimate the cotton yet to be ginned by a ratio established by previous years would be utterly and hopefully against the farmer, because this year nearly all of the cotton has already been ginned and the balance figured by reference to the records kept of other years would be totally unwarranted.

Cotton should be selling now for 30 cents and would have been doing so had it not been for the promulgation of that last miscalculated government report.

Judging a Great Institution by Small Defects

By J. H. PUELICHER
President American Bankers Association.

It would be difficult to find a banker, understanding thoroughly the Federal Reserve System, willing to admit that we could continue a first-class commercial nation, without the Federal Reserve Banks, or mechanisms similar to them. Yet there is antagonism to the Federal Reserve Banks based in a measure on some minor mistakes in administration, but more generally on a misunderstanding of their purposes, of what should be expected of such a system.

J. H. Puelicher

The banker, as much as any man, is to blame for the present misconception. He found Federal Reserve Banks a ready scapegoat to blame for no matter what happened. If it seemed desirable to refuse or call a loan it was easy to say that the Federal Reserve Bank wished it, although it should have been refused because contrary to good banking practice.

Most of all was the system blamed for the fact that violent inflation which hundreds of business men and bankers hoped might be continued forever was finally checked by putting up Federal Reserve interest rates. There were those who blamed the system for not having put up the rate soon enough and others who blamed it because it put up the rate at all.

The penalty for thus blaming every business mishap on this valuable system may be the loss of its much needed benefits. If we wish to save the present bank of the United States from the fate of its two predecessors we must make known to America, to its rank and file, the splendid usefulness of these institutions.

We must admit at the outset that in their administration mistakes have been made, that governors of Federal Reserve Banks and members of the Federal Reserve Board are human beings, and in the administration of the affairs of any institution by human beings mistakes will be made, but these have been so insignificant as compared with the outstanding usefulness of the institutions themselves that they should be judged by the good which they have performed, which, after all, has been along the line of their designed achievement, rather than by those errors which time and experience can easily eliminate.

COOPERATIVE FARM MARKETING NOTES

Progress of the Movement to "Put Farming on Par With Other Big Business."

A pamphlet and questionnaire on co operative farm marketing recently issued by the State Bank Division, American Bankers Association, has brought out valuable information on the subject from bankers, farmers and state agricultural departments. It is being used as a campaign document in the organization of co-operative marketing associations in various sections of the country, farmers having adopted its slogan: "Put Agriculture on a Par with Other Big Business."

* * * *

The movement on the part of farmers toward co-operative marketing as a cure for their present economic plight is nation wide. There has been notable progress in the development of such associations, some conspicuously successful ones being in operation at the present time. There have also been some disastrous failures among these ventures in co-operative marketing, which is the inevitable accompaniment of the progress of any movement. The "Banker-Farmer," published by the American Bankers Association, says:

"Cause and effect are operative in co-operative marketing as truly as they are in every other business enterprise. An association will not necessarily succeed or fail merely because it is a co-operative association, but because it conforms to or transgresses from the underlying principles of successful business operation. The movement itself is of great national import and the bankers of the country can materially aid or retard its progress. The responsibility of leadership in rural communities rests very largely with the country banker. It is his duty to be informed on all matters relating to the farmers' well-being."

* * *

Modern conditions are such that agriculture cannot be successful by individual effort. To regain its position as a basic industry, and as a force in national affairs, agriculture must depend upon organization and co-operation for economic production, for economic marketing and for the establishment of its proper relationship in community life.—Howard Leonard, President, Illinois Agricultural Association.

WORLD'S GREATEST BANKING SYSTEM

By CRAIG B. HAZLEWOOD
President Association of Reserve City Bankers

Conceived in the spirit of common good, for the best interests of government, banks and public alike, based on broad and correct principles relating to the nation's currency and credit, the Federal Reserve System represents the greatest piece of economic legislation enacted by an American Congress. The System's record of achievement through a world war, an inflation period of dizzy heights, and months of serious and costly liquidation. It is a matter of greatest importance that very earnest and patriotic thought be given to the two questions: How far has the system succeeded, and in what particulars has it failed, to give our country as strong and as useful a financial system as human mind can devise?

C. B. Hazlewood

The hope and expectation of those who framed the Federal Reserve Act that the machinery set-up for the origination, distribution and automatic retirement of currency issue, which should be entirely responsive to the needs of trade and the varying conditions of business, have been wonderfully well realized. Every possible effort must be exerted to preserve the Federal Reserve System from political alliance and to keep its powerful influence entirely devoted to the building up of the greatest banking system in the world.

The first bank of the United States was established in 1791 and failed to obtain a renewal of its charter in 1811, the opponents charging that the bank was a "money trust" controlled by foreigners, a tool in the hands of Federalists, and that the act chartering the bank was unconstitutional. Note the use of the words "money trust." We have the idea that this is a modern term. The suspicions which animate the demagogue today have not changed in a century.

The second bank of the United States was chartered in 1816 and failed to obtain a renewal of its charter in 1881, the reasons being a widespread belief that the bank was unconstitutional, the hostility of the states, the opposition of the state banks, the rise of democracy, and the envy and hatred which the poor always feel toward the rich.

Both banks functioned well and accomplished much for the country during crucial times. The downfall of both was caused simply and solely by attempts to place the determination of banking policies in the hands of political authorities.

The delicate handling of currency and credit, to the high end that the best interests of all may be served with special privilege to none, cannot be left to others than those who are competent through proven judgment and experience. The danger of politics in the Federal Reserve System is a real one; upon us is placed the grave responsibility of forever keeping the great system clean.

MAKING CAPITALISTS OUT OF WORKMEN

Festus J. Wade Says Anarchy Disappears With Development of Thrift.

When the savings pass-book comes into a man's life to stay the red flag goes out. What the country needs is to bring about a condition whereby the man who works with his hands shall take the same interest in his affairs as the capitalist does in his. Probably the best way to do this would be to turn the workman into a capitalist. And this is exactly what he becomes when he saves his money and builds up a reserve fund. He remains a capitalist as long as he holds on to that money. The satisfaction of seeing his money reserve mount up will discourage the wastar to take a layoff now and then. It will encourage him to work a full six-day week and thereby increase the labor hours applied to production.

The American people can solve any problem they set themselves to. We provided for a sound currency when the greenbackers and inflationists were routed and the gold basis established. The Federal Reserve Bank was established and solved a problem for which most people thought there was no solution. A number of years ago, when there was a crisis or when a bank failed, we all used to shut up our vaults tight and let nothing get out. Instead of bettering conditions we made them worse. Now if failures occur few people, except those directly interested, are disturbed.

Perhaps the most important problem of all right now is to do away with labor waste. It never can be done by preaching, by agitation or by force. It can be done by selling the workman on the idea of becoming a capitalist. This can be brought about by the right kind of bank advertising. Who is there to say that an advertising dollar bringing about this result would not be a constructive dollar?—Festus J. Wade.

GIVE US A SYSTEM IN ROAD BUILDING

The following, taken from the editorial columns of the Age-Herald of Monday, causes our heart to rejoice. This is the first thing we have noticed in any other paper, except the Chilton County News, that even intimated a kick against the "patch work" of the Road Commissioners. Possibly under the smaller board some semblance of a systematic effort to build roads will develop:

The three-member state highway commission, which is expected to hold its first meeting today, has a large task and a heavy responsibility which directly affects the interests and welfare of all the people of Alabama. To make practical plans and carry them out in so large and important a project will enlist the highest purposes and the most intelligent and constructive efforts of the members. They are men of vision, capacity and knowledge of the states needs in the great undertaking. They realize that the fruits of their work are not for a day or a year, but for a generation or more. Very largely upon the results of their efforts will depend the extent of the government's co-operation and aid in this enterprise.

It is encouraging to note that the construction of highways throughout the state is in the hands of a small board of competent men who are to give their entire time and attention to the development of a highway system. There is no more truthful statement than what is everybody's business is nobody's business. That may be applied by way of comparing the present highway situation with what it formerly was. With a large and unwieldy board representing political divisions and feeling very little individual responsibility, Alabama would not get out of the mud for a generation, if ever. With a small board of men fitted for the task and giving their whole time to the project, there are hopes that notable results will soon be in evidence.

Up to this time there have been grevious blunders made both in the planning and in the methods of construction. Something like nineteen millions of dollars have been spent or agreed upon, and there are no signs of state highways forming backbones for roads leading to and from the centers. So far the project has been in the nature of patch-work, apparently without a fixed program or a definite purpose. Under such conditions there was little hope of a comprehensive system of highways that would serve the entire state. That is to be changed. The plan of the new commission is understood to contemplate not only a system that will enable the people to get somewhere, but the selection of materials and the adoption of construction principles which will prove economical in the long run through the lowering of maintenance costs.

FIRE!

The Atlanta Georgian wonders if you know that every minute of the year $1,000 in fire losses occurs in these United States, and that one human life is consumed by flames every half hour?

And that 1,500 fires break out in the United States every 24 hours? And that 85 percent of all fires are preventable, that is, are the "result of downright carelessness?"

We are careless about leaving trash around, about shutting of electric irons and about the condition of wiring. In fact, most people are careless at all times in handling fire and inflammable materials and that's why fires we don't desire cost $1,000 a minute.

CHILTON COUNTY HIGH DEFEATS PLANTERSVILLE

Many thrills were sent up the spinal columns of a large number of spectators yesterday when the locals defeated Dallas County H. S. in the closest contested game of fotball of the season. The game was exciting, from the start to the finish There were no outstanding stars for the locals unless you were to mention that each member of the team starred in his position. Notwithstanding the fact that two of the varsity players were out of the game on account of slight injuries.

The visitors gave the "Tigers" a clean game and it will be remembered that they fought unt'l the last minute. Fulmer, the quarterback was an easy star for the Plantersville team and it is thought that he will be able to lead his team to many a victory before the season is over

There were only two players in the locals' line up who had had any experience in the game. Coach Pegues is daily ironing the "kinks" out of the team and before the season is over the High School is expecting to have many more Lonfires in Clanton, celebrating the locals' victories.

Misses Popwell and Minor, two of the beautiful H. S. girls, were the sponsors for the locals.

The teams were lined up as follows.

Clanton		Plantersville
Raffin	L. E.	Jones
Roberts	L. T.	Guy
Parrish	L. G.	Dyer
Hester	C.	Fulmer

GOOD BYE, CUT OUT

We are reliably informed that the soul harrowing and sin inspiring cut out on the trucks and automobiles are to go next.

If the long suffering people of Clanton can be thankful for small favors, the passing of the greatest nusiance of the 20th century—the cut out—will overwhelm them.

We would like to see the day of their final passing celebrated in all future years by a festival of rejoicing and the history of their horrible reign as instruments of torture to the innocent citizen portrayed in song and story as a warning to all future generations.

Looking at the new touring car from the side, you are at once favorably impressed with the effect of longer, more graceful lines secured by enlarging the cowl and raising the radiator

Slanting windshield and one-man top lend material aid in giving the entire car a lower, more stylish appearance.

An apron connecting the radiator with the fender skirts is also a decided improvement

A comfort feature much appreciated by owners, is the additional leg room provided by the enlargement of the cowl.

Allow us to show you the entire line of new Ford cars now on display in our show room.

These cars can be obtained through the Ford Weekly Purchase Plan.

A NEW RECORD IN CAR SHIPMENTS

The firm of Jno. T. Ellis & Sons set a new record for this section in the shipment of large and expensive automobiles this week.

They received a full car load of model 1924 Buick cars Monday. These cars have the latest in brake equipment, have brakes on all four wheels.

This hustling firm has already sold two of these new cars and has several other inquiries.

They will also be in shape by next week to put Woco Pep on the market wholesale. The large tanks are already in place, the railroad siding complete and with just a few minor details disposed of, they wil be ready to go into the market with both feet.

Their nifty filling station has been given a coat of paint that tells the Woco Pep story.

Mr. Ellis is certainly one of the hustling kind and deserves success.

Governor Walton, Beaten in Oklahoma Election, Refuses to Give Up Fight.

FOES WANT HIM INDICTED

German Cabinet Resigns and Chancellor Stresemann Plans Directorate —Monarchy Due Soon in Bavaria— Federation of Labor Convention—President Coolidge and World Court.

By EDWARD W. PACKARD

IT WAS the turn of Governor Walton to get walloped last week, and he did get walloped. But he didn't take the blow lying down. To those who enjoy a stand-up and knock-down fight, the news from Oklahoma these days may be pleasant reading, but it really is not edifying. It would seem that when such conditions can continue for a long time there must be something lacking in our democratic institutions.

Having obtained court sanction for the special election called for last Tuesday, the people of Oklahoma insisted on holding it. At first, Walton declared it should not be held, insisting that, as he had called it, it was his election and he could call it off if he desired. He reconstituted the state election board so that it might obey his behests; ordered the entire National Guard of the state mobilized and then recalled the order; called another special election for Dec. 6; yielded at last in the face of various restraining orders from courts, and said he was willing to vacate his office if the people of the state preferred the rule of the "invisible empire" to that of the constituted authorities. In several counties the governor's efforts prevented the citizens from casting their votes in the usual manner, but many of them mailed their ballots to the capital and others used improvised election machinery. But the election was held, and by a majority of about four to one the voters approved of the constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to convene itself to consider impeachment charges against the governor and other state officers.

Though he was thus knocked through the ropes, Walton climbed back into the ring and obtained from District Judge Tom G. Chambers, one of his appointees, a temporary restraining order forbidding the state election board to certify the returns to the secretary of state. Hearing on the application to make this order was set for October 9. The governor asserted the election was illegal because the proposed amendments submitted had not been properly advertised, and that thousands of voters were intimidated by deputy sheriffs and by the influence of the Ku Klux Klan. The opposition countered with a petition for a grand jury in Oklahoma City to investigate charges that Walton has misused public moneys and to inquire into the appointment of thousands of state "secret service" agents of the executive.

Governor Walton is issuing a stream of proclamations and statements. In one of the latest he says: "The klux guns of the nation are trained on me. I am daily in receipt of threats of assassination, but I had rather die by the hand of an assassin than die the death of a coward. The fight is to a finish. There will be no compromise."

Representative McBee, leader of the anti-Waltonites in the legislature, asserts there is no klan issue in Oklahoma, "except in the hallucinations of a disordered brain."

HAVING failed utterly to come to terms with the Social Democrats, who opposed the abolition of the eight-hour day and the reorganization of the cabinet to include the Nationalists, Chancellor Stresemann of Germany dissolved his ministry and was directed by President Ebert to form a new cabinet. The chancellor's spokesman announced that there would be no new party cabinet, but a small ministry similar to a directorate, and it was [illegible] by socialists would be resolved. Various cabinet offices will be left unfilled and others will be edited and put in charge of direct representatives of the chancellor. The directorate's policies, it was said, would include the seizure of economic values, the control of prices, increased production and the giving up of the eight-hour law. It is asserted that the Bavarian dictatorship is not a subject of controversy.

Under the plan of Minister of Finance Helferding, the time has arrived for the Industrialists headed by Stinnes to begin paying real taxes with which the government intended to start paying reparations to France so that an adjustment in the Ruhr might be accomplished. Stinnes and his crowd asserted they could not pay these taxes or permit a part of their property to be confiscated, and insisted a ten or twelve-hour day for workmen was necessary if reparations were to be paid, for it would be necessary for Germany to undersell the rest of the world.

In Bavaria Dictator von Kahr is defying the Berlin government and the civil commissar it appointed for his state. He also defies the Socialists and to their threat of a general strike retorts with an order forbidding strikes and making them punishable by imprisonment. For terror acts or sabotage penal servitude with unlimited fines is ordered, while for endangering lives or treason to the new system the penalty is death.

"The monarchy in Bavaria will not be proclaimed now," said Von Kahr, "but it is growing, and it will come by itself when it is ready." It is probable that Crown Prince Rupprecht will be placed on the throne. This is the aim of Hittler, chief of the Bavarian Fascisti, who is supported by General Ludendorff and to whom it is said Von Kahr has been making friendly advances.

Royalist uprisings took place in several parts of Germany last week, the most important being at Kustrin, Prussia, where an organized band captured the fortress, only to lose it next day. There was some bloodshed, and the leaders of the revolt were imprisoned.

In the occupied regions miners and post office employees resumed work generally, but the French officials negotiated in vain with the railroad workers. The cities of Dusseldorff, Essen, Dortmund, Wirden, Horne and Bochum began paying the expenses of the French and Belgian armies of occupation. The separatists of the Rhineland staged a demonstration in Dusseldorff which developed into a battle with the German police in the course of which a number were killed and hundreds wounded.

ONCE again the attempt was made last week to persuade organized labor in the United States that it should form a national labor party. At this writing it seems certain to fail. Delegates from Illinois and Minnesota to the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor in Portland, Ore., introduced resolutions calling for adoption of "independent political action for workers."

Two fraternal delegates from Great Britain, without trying to influence the action of the federation, told of the recent great successes of their Labor party, which is now the official opposition in parliament and is not unlikely to get control of the government before long.

President Sam Gompers was as always quick and forceful in reply. He outlined the distinctions between the American and British political schemes, showing that in England the labor men had only to drive at one objective—control of parliament—while here there are congress and all the legislatures. He spoke of the vast difference in citizenship.

"We are wage earners," he said. "To have a dominating influence in determining the laws emanating from the employers' officers is of greater importance to the men and women who toil than any laws passed by congress or legislatures."

Dennis Lane, international president of the meat cutters and butchers' union, announced that an intensive campaign would begin at once to reorganize the workers in the meat packing industry. The International Plasterers' union pledged its co-operation in aiding ex-service men to become efficient building trades mechanics, and it was believed other building trades [illegible] Secretary Morrison reported [illegible] emergency fund of the federation [illegible] to $81,000. The total receipts for the year were $807,880, and the expenditures $962,298. Total membership of the federation was announced as 2,926,468, showing a loss for the fourth consecutive year, and of more than 200,000 in the past twelve months.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has let it be known that he will hold a series of conferences with influential Democratic senators, as well as with Republican leaders, to obtain their ideas as to the best way of getting action on the proposition of American membership in the world court. Because he has pledged himself to carry out Mr. Harding's policies, the President will remind the senate that the protocol still awaits its action, but it is understood in Washington that he will not attempt to force its adoption. He wants the question out of the way early, however, so that congress shall be free to devote its attention to domestic problems.

Among the friends of Hiram Johnson the announcement of the President's intention to consult the Democrats was taken to mean that he would exert his influence in favor of the world court plan, and they believe this will bring the California senator out as an avowed candidate for the presidential nomination. Indeed, Mr. Johnson has said as much, though he declares he will not yet do anything to embarrass the President.

OUR other Senator Johnson, Magnus of Minnesota, has been in the East talking, being interviewed and calling on President Coolidge. The "effete" part of the country seemed disappointed to find that Magnus wasn't a freak, but was well dressed, benevolent appearing and quite civilized. At the White House he conferred with Mr. Coolidge and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace on price fixing for agricultural products. When he came out he said: "I told President Coolidge that price fixing is the only remedy for the present distressing situation. I also told him about the producers' alliance and its determination to hold the crop off the market until the producers could obtain a fair price for their products. The President was sympathetic, but he had evidently not made up his mind."

ANOTHER severe earthquake shock occurred at Tokyo Thursday, driving residents from their homes and cutting off the electric lights. About the same time a temblor was felt in California.

Daniel E. Douty, representing the silk industry of America, told Premier Yamamoto and the minister of agriculture last week that the Japanese silk trust is blocking shipments, causing an economic loss of $30,000,000 monthly, and that this will cause the great mills at Paterson and Passaic to close down very soon. Though Yokohama cannot be used as a port until probably next year, the Japanese trust refuses to permit temporary transfer of shipments to Kyoto, Nagoya and Shimidzu.

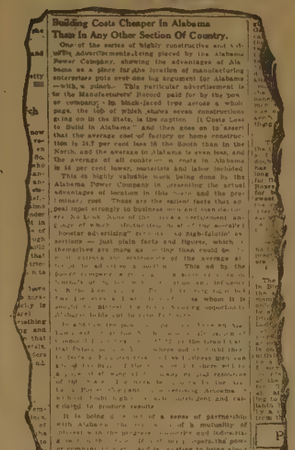
Official Japanese figures place the number of known dead in the earthquake at 103,000, the injured at 125,000 and the missing at 235,000. These figures are probably overconservative.

THE ZR-1, the American navy's huge new dirigible, which is to be christened Shenandoah—"Daughter of the Stars"—made a record trip from Lakehurst, N. J., to St. Louis and return by way of Chicago, in forty-seven hours and forty-nine minutes. She traveled about 2,200 miles during forty-six hours actually in the air. Her only stop was in St. Louis, where great throngs of aviators and spectators were gathering for the international air races which began on Thursday.

EVACUATION of Constantinople was completed by the allies on Tuesday, and on Saturday the Turkish troops formally entered the city amid scenes of great rejoicing. It is reported that Turkey will soon be declared a republic.

OVER in Spain the directorate has abolished the last traces of civil rule. First the civil governors of the various states were done away with and then all the municipal governments and all "general councils" or county [illegible] were abolished. The cities and towns are governed by juntas under direct orders of Dictator Primo Rivera.

In Partnership With Alabama



(Editorial Reproduced from Birmingham News of Sept. 11, 1923.)

Alabama and the Alabama Power Company are partners in the business of promoting happiness, contentment and prosperity for 2,500,000 people.

Like any other partnership, if the business fails to function properly, all partners suffer alike.

A mutual undertaking with a mutual goal produces a mutual benefit.

It is with this fact in mind that the Power Company is endeavoring, at its own expense, to promote a greater State through the advertising of her natural resources and advantages in a series of magazine advertisements, exhibits and motion pictures.

The Power Company appreciates the Birmingham News' very kind expression as reproduced above; and the hundreds of others; all of which indicate a state-wide appreciation of its efforts. Such expressions are an incentive for nobler purposes, greater effort and an increased desire to be of real worth to the State in which it works and serves.

Sponge Baths.

First, there was the cold one for morning, preceded and followed by a brisk rub with a flesh brush. You can, you know, stand on a bath mat before a bowl of cold water and put a great deal of it all over yourself with a sponge or cloth. It isn't necessary to make the floor into a swimming pool. Next, there was the hot sponge bath at night, with cleanliness as the main aim. For this use an unscented soap, lathering the body with it generously. After drying with a great soft towel apply the softest kind of talcum powder—one of the kinds made for babies' skin.—Designs Magazine

Generous Son.

Habits of industry formed in youth, quoting an adage, remain with one through life. To work all through life is some people's ambition. Others, however, would retire early—too early, in fact—would retire before they begin.

When Jackson persisted in giving play the better of the argument when his father wished him to work, the fond parent reproached him severely.

"Boy, what do you mean by loafing on the job?" he said with heat. "Get busy and do something."

"Ain't I busy?" son responded.

"Yes, busy doing nothing."

"Well, I know, but I don't want to work. I hate work."

"Hate work! Why, work is a pleasure to me."

"Well, dad, you can have all the pleasure you want."

French Wheat Production.

From an investigation made by the French minister of agriculture it is estimated that the wheat production in France in 1922 was over 6,600,000 metric tons. The decree requiring the incorporation of a certain percentage of wheat substitute in the milling of flour is to be strictly enforced in order to avoid the necessity of importing wheat into France

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By Charles Tenney Jackson

"THE PLOT NAPOLEON"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates.

"He would be at home anywhere—" Beluche watched the jester who had wandered back among the wine tuns searching for his pewter mug: "Do you recall how our rough fellows were amazed when we first tumbled him off a sacked merchantman down among us, and at once—with our pistols at his head—he began to bawl for drink? As I live, thereafter, on the Petral, he feared nothing save that the next prize might have more gold than liquor!"

"He did us all honor," mused Lafitte. "Eh, the old faces about me!"

Jarvis, the youngest of them all, save Raoul, staggered to the table. "Piracy," he lamented, "ruined me! I was treated all too famously by the cutthroats. But, Jean—now, if we had a ship—eh, well! The drink this way!"

"Ah, the ship! It appears we have forgotten why we are here! The ship? We have a ship!"

"A ship?" growled a new voice. Nez Coupe, the small wiry Canary Islander, with a face most frightfully disfigured by a saber cut, the most lawless of the former Grand Terre privateers, an outlaw still unpardoned, came to the table lamp. "What talk! Not one of us all could purchase a yawl boat!"

Beluche and Dominique fidgeted. Beluche gestured uneasily to the fastidious De Almonaster. It seemed he must speak; it was for that they had fetched him to the council.

"There is a ship appointed for a purpose," began the count, reservedly. "The Girod ship, fitted by the citizenry—for a certain purpose—"

"Bah! That Napoleon folly!" growled Johannness: "Child's play! Ah, but a ship for your eye, my captain!"

The grim grizzled faces looked from the captain to the youngest man.

"It is difficult to announce," continued Raoul. "But I have, this day, taken over my aunt's interest, and that of Monsieur Allain, in the Girod ship. I have, therefore, a word as to her. As you all know, the Napoleon venture is not a secret. The mayor, Rouffignac, the Creole families of the city, are heartily in sympathy with it. I have been against it until—Monsieur Dominique proposed that we intrigue for Captain Sazarac to command."

There was a shout—derision, incredulity, protest. The wilder ones uprose feverishly. Dominique would have spoken, but Jarvis staggered up, cup in hand. "A toast! The plot! Ho, villains, all—to the plot!" And he roared the louder.

"The devil take you!" growled Beluche. "The watchman on the corner—"

Sazarac raised his hand. "I, to command? What madness again! The young blades of the town are to man the schooner—they would be spanked to bed if Lafitte was to be known among them!"

"We have thought powerful influence could be brought to bear for your pardon, Monsieur. A rare exploit to reinstate you—seizing the emperor from his prison isle!"

Sazarac laughed idly: "Quite impossible. Gentlemen, I beg you—"

"A ship!" shouted Johanness, as if, suddenly, to his old eyes had leaped the vision of far sea days: "The Seraphine! Jean, and a ship again! A ship shaken free in the gulf, and any flag will serve!"

"Silence, you fool!" gasped Dominique.

"Perdition with aldermen! Ho, you—Beluche, with the gilt gimcracks on your shoulders—what do you think? Jean on the quarter-deck, and you and I at the lookouts? Name o' G—d! One crack at the fat fleets, and then south across the line!"

"In the swamps off Point Le Garde," shouted Nez Coupe, "I can enlist a dozen overnight who once sailed with Jean and Pierre!"

"Hist!" lamented Dominique. "They can hear you to the levee! Let the young gentleman talk; then our captain will have it clear." He shall be Sazarac until we are cleared, Captain Gaspar Sazarac with recommendations from the Americans of the West. Monsieur de Almonaster will vouch for Sazarac. I, myself, the alderman, have known this worthy Sazarac who is to be the secluded house guest of Monsieur de Almonaster, and introduced aright ere we broach the Napoleon matter—"

Jarvis suddenly thrust his drink-swollen face close to the lamp. He grinned with tipsy awakening. "Why, so—this Sazarac! Ho, Jean!—a woman! You are overnight in the town, and at once a woman!" He fumbled in his breast and brought out a crushed flower, and laid it down with a mock flourish. "Did you ever, Captain Gaspar Sazarac—smell camellias in the moonlight?"

Sazarac stood glancing from John Jarvis to the camellia upon the table. The jester was grinning knowingly. The Count de Almonaster turned a puzzled face upon them both.

"The affair of the English woman," grumbled Beluche. "Twaddle of the gossipers on the promenade. A drunken fool, and an evil jest! Sazarac need not challenge. The scandal is upon Carr and his two women."

But Jarvis continued to leer upon the leader's silent face. "I wish I could paint love in a woman's eye—" he mocked. "Then there should be a mistress with a camellia in her hair at my studio." He turned away to draw his measure of wine.

CHAPTER V

Two Gentlemen of Mystery.

The honorable the mayor, Monsieur Rouffignac, stood on the stone flags of the City hall, or Principal, as it was yet called from the Spanish days, and looked contentedly out on the rue Chartres. He had come early, before the heat of the day, for some business with his clerks.

"Helgh-o!" sighed the mayor. "A long day for me! The council will not meet until ten—but I shall cut them short! Ah, there—good morning, Monsieur Mudge!"

Mr. Mudge, of the banking firm of Mudge & Fickert, was turning from the street: a tall and immaculate gentleman in high bell hat and new, long, tight trousers outside his equally tight boots; and behind him, the mayor noted, was Mr. Langhorne, the consul of Great Britain. The greetings were of punctilious respect.

"A Toast! The Plot! Ho, Villains, All—to the Plot!" And He Roared the Louder.

"What makes you so early astir, gentlemen?" queried His Honor. "As for me—I am the most lamentably overworked man in Louisiana. The governor sends me vast communications—all in the English, these days, which, unfortunately, I cannot read so well; and Monsieur La Tour, getting up his new city directory, insists that I read his proofs—and there is not a picayune victualer, nor a mender of pots that he does not get in so that New Orleans may claim rank with Philadelphia or New York! La—la! there are too many of us now!"

"You may well say," rejoined Mr. Mudge hurriedly, "complaint has already been made by the English captain—petty thieves made away with some of his merchandise on the Algierine dock. The customs people have pursued them—I believe one fellow was shot in a fracas down Bayou Barataria, near the plantation of Monsieur Berthoud."

"An outrage, sir," protested the consul. "In the name of his majesty I must make representations—"

"It is an affair, sir," said Monsieur Rouffignac politely, "more for the United States authorities."

"Yes, but they are laughing about the town, sir! Rough fellows of the wineshops and the levees are all agog with this rumor that the bandit of Barataria has returned; and at once an outrage is put on the port's shipping!"

"Hum," said the mayor, "I know. Thirty cases of muskets, by some mistake, put out from the English ship on the dock. The port officers—"

"The captain of the Genaron has protested, sir," fumed the consul; "the cargo was destined for the Mexicoes. But some thieving villains take advantage of the question raised—"

"The Barataria—Monsieur Mayor!" blustered the merchant; "the pardoned rascals of Jean Lafitte! The very rumor of his return disturbs our commerce. Look, now—here comes old Gorgio, the crayfish seller—as big a villain as is unhung, pardoned by the President! And do you think he will trouble himself to step off the banquette when gentlemen come by, when he knows that half of Louisiana has come to think of Jean Lafitte as more patriot than pirate?"

"Hum—hum," mused the placid mayor; "some maintain that he saved the city in 1815. Eh, my dear consul!—but we are very good friends now, are we not? Hum—hum—and here comes Monsieur Dominique, who ought to know something about this idle gossip of Lafitte."

Mudge, the banker, bowed stiffly to the portly alderman; Langhorne, with a frown—there were some fastidious gentry who did not care for equality with the pardoned and Falstaffian buccaneer. The mayor turned slyly to him.

"Ah, Monsieur Dominique! The gentlemen ask of a matter upon which you might enlighten us. Lafitte's reputed return!"

The councilor raised a fat hand. "And if it were true, rue Royale would be ribboned to welcome him, I do believe!"

The respectable banker shrugged. "Enough! Mr. Langhorne, we shall take our business to the customs! The city is a trifler's town! And this other jest—the sailing of the Napoleon ship. Mr. Mayor, the folly leaps and grows! Sober, decent merchants entering the coffee houses are badgered by young roisterers to subscribe to the plot Napoleon! Anything for a fanfaronade, even if it brought England and the United States to war!"

Langhorne, the consul, raised a hand laughingly. "The Seraphine, good sirs, will be well watched once these crackbrains put her nose out the passes! His majesty is not atremble at this frolic!"

And with a bow the two gentlemen departed. Half a square distant, the consul turned to the banker.

"Colonel Carr, sir—has me distracted. He brings credentials from Quebec that I cannot ignore, and yet I mistrust him. Styled as a commissioner to the rebellious subjects of the Spanish king in New Granada, he has seemed overbusied up the Mississippi on his way overland."

"You fear Carr's honesty? Faith, the fellow has been too drunken to be dangerous. And you know his brawl with this Captain Sazarac? I should say they are both men of mystery out of the Northwest. The old talk of Aaron Burr's rival republic in the Mississippi valley is revived again; but if England is in it—"

"Perdition, sir! It is not so! He who comes to Louisiana thinking to find friction between the Yankees and the Creoles must be a better diplomat than Colonel Carr, sir—if that is what you mean!"

The merchant took snuff gravely. "We trust that he represents nothing but some malicious fur-traders, sir. Last night, I am informed, he had Madame Page's pension in an uproar. Starting to beat a black girl, he wound up by striking his wife; and then having a set-to with some unknown guest or caller. And the lady who is his wife, sir—is not of mettle to brook outrage."

"Mrs. Carr is of an old Tory family that fled from New York in the first war—bitter against the American government—far more than the British themselves. Then there is Carr's ward—"

"I had heard a famous beauty, sir."

"The young gallants already are agog for a peep at her when she is driven on the Esplanade. But the women seek absolute seclusion, humiliated utterly at Colonel Carr's conduct."

"The girl is of value to Carr's schemes, you think?"

Langhorne took his snuff absently. "That is the question. She was of a family that had great estates in the islands. She is loyal to the Carrs through gratitude to those who saved her life."

The merchant glanced at the clock in the cathedral facade.

"Well, enough of this. The coffee houses have already forgotten the affair of Carr and this adventurer Sazarac."

"This week the sensation is choosing the crew under Bossiere to man the Napoleon ship. Nothing has so tickled the popular fancy of the Creoles!"

"I trust your government does not take it seriously?"

The consul laughed shortly. "We watch it, sir! The clipper may take twoscore gallants out of the city, for if the thing is made fashionable enough, the Seraphine would sail with her decks crammed by ambitious admirals, commodores, captains and lieutenants! Bonaparte, himself, would be astounded at the array of perfumed gentlemen who would greet him in his exile!"

"Bossiere is to command," mused Mr. Mudge. "He, at least, is a seaman."

"I am an evil legacy . . . and I am forty-two."

Absolutely Honest.

Robert W. Chambers, whose vivid portraits of the modern girl have made him famous, said at a dinner party in his New York home:

"The modern girl has many faults, but at least she is open and aboveboard. There's nothing of the deceitful puss about her.

"On a moonlight winter night in Florida a modern young man passionately kissed a beautiful modern girl under a palm tree.

"'I'll be frank with you,' the young man said after the embrace was over. 'You're not the first girl I've ever kissed, by a long shot.'

"She lit a huge and costly cigarette. "'And I'll be equally frank with you,' she answered. 'You've got a great deal to learn even at that.'"—New York Mail.

Price of Bread in Paris.

The price of bread in Paris and the Seine department is the highest that has been known since the siege of Paris in 1870. Bread is the chief foodstuff of the French population.

We feel sorry for the girl who knows more than she ought to, and not as much as she should.

The People Themselves.

At an agricultural show in Dublin a pompous member of parliament, who arrived late, found himself on the outskirts of a huge crowd.

Being anxious to obtain a good view, and presuming that he was well known to the spectators, he tapped a man on the shoulder and ordered: "Make way there!"

"Garn! Who are ye pushin'?" was the unexpected reply.

"Do you know who I am, sir?" cried the indignant M. P. "I'm a representative of the people!"

"Yah!" growled the other; "but we're the bloomin' people themselves."

A Difference.

"How long is it going to take to get through with this case?" asked the client, who was under suspicion of housebreaking. "Well," replied the young lawyer, thoughtfully, "it'll take me about two weeks to get through with it, but I'm afraid it's going to take you about four years."—Green Bag.

THE PERIL OF EDISON-FORD'S MONEY SCHEME

Would Create More Paper Money Than Russia's Trillions But Add No Real Wealth.

SOME DANGEROUS FALLACIES

Would Remove Safe Restraint of Gold Basis and Open Way to Endless Issues of Paper Money.

How the United States would be swamped, under a greater volume of worthless paper money than has ruined Germany and Russia, by the Edison-Ford commodity currency plan is pointed out in the present article, concluding the reviews, prepared by the American Bankers Association, of the recent exposure of the folly of the whole scheme by William T. Foster, Director of the Pollack Foundation for Economic Research. Mr. Foster says:

"'The supply of money,' says Mr. Ford, 'is inadequate. There is more wealth than there is money to move it.' He draws a vivid picture of 'the golden dam in the stream of prosperity.' From a hundred quarters comes the demand for the government to speed up the printing presses, in order to crush 'the money monopoly,' reduce interest rates, and make it easier for everybody to get money.

"Inflating the currency, however, though it enables people to get more units of currency, does not enable them to obtain more purchasing power, and it does not reduce interest rates. In all her history Germany never had so much money or as high interest rates as in 1922. Money, unlike other forms of wealth, is not easier to obtain simply because the total supply is increased. On the contrary, increasing the supply of money ordinarily increases the demand for money, and interest rates depend not on supply but on the relation between supply and demand.

A Dangerous Fallacy

"We are assured, however, that the Ford-Edison plan provides money for the farmer at virtually no expense to the government or to anyone else. All the government has to do is to print the money. What could be simpler? Here we come to the most dangerous fallacy in the whole project. It is a fallacy because of the universal desire to get something for nothing.

"Here is the gist of the matter: Money will buy whatever is produced, no particle more by any trick of arithmetic or legislation, or finance. The things, having multiplied their money 2,000 times, cannot buy as much with it as before. When we print more money there are no more goods for money to buy; not a single additional plow, or hat, or potato.

"Some of those who get the newly printed money can buy more goods than before; all other people can buy fewer goods than before, because their money has fallen off in purchasing power. Since there are no more plows, and hats, and potatoes, and so on, to distribute, if some people get more, others must get less.

"Inflation under the Edison plan is limited mainly because, on account of its indefensible discrimination, most groups of producers of goods and services are not allowed to participate. If all groups were included, as in fairness and in politics they would have to be eventually, the possibilities of inflation would be vast.

The Deadly Spiral

"The total income of the United States is now in excess of fifty billions of dollars. The total money in circulation, including bank deposits subject to check, is not far from twenty-five billions. It follows that the annual production, if used as a basis for new issues on the Edison plan, could at once greatly increase the volume of money in circulation. Every addition to the monetary supply would tend to raise prices. The higher prices became, the higher would be the loan value of a given volume of goods since the size of the loans is based on values and not volume. The greater, therefore, would be the volume of new money that could be issued on the basis of a given annual production. Prices would become still higher; and so on up an endless spiral.

"Even in Russia, where financial printing presses hold the world's record for volume, where new issues of two hundred trillions of rubles per month stagger the imagination, the people complain that 'there is not enough money to do business with.' Without the arbitrary restraint of the gold basis, and with Muscle Shoals inflationists, and sundry other kinds of inflationists constantly pressing their claims upon Congress, it is not at all certain that the United States, once well on the road to financial chaos, would in the end be outrun by Russia."

BANKS HELP CLUB WORK

Yakima County Banks in the State of Wassington have loaned $8,670 to boy and girl club members. Yakima County has twenty-nine pig club members, twenty-four poultry club members and forty-three dairy club members. Dairy club members are all using pure-bred stock, local breeders and bankers co-operating with them to the fullest extent.

TRUTH IN A NUTSHELL

Martin L. Davey, a member of the house of representatives from Ohio reading that the president, after long study of the situation, had failed to find a remedy for the trouble which besets the wheat farmer, offered the executive, in most circumspect manner, a bit of advice.

Obviously, it is very excellent advice. And obviously, it will not be accepted. Which recalls the old adage that a man capable of taking and acting upon good advice is too capable to need it.

Davey says, simply, reduce freight rates on those things the farmer buys, and sells twenty-five or thirty percent and increase freight rates on luxuries in order that the railroads might not too greatly suffer; and reduce, very materially, tariff rates on everything the farmer must buy to conduct his enterprise.

Davey declares the Interstate Commerce Commission would in all probability reduce rates were the executive to urge such reduction, and that the president, without assistance from congress, could decrease tariff rates.

All of which is true. But Coolidge would bring down a storm upon his head were he to assail the Fordney-McCumber tariff scheme, which has proved such a blessing to "big business."

Davey, in his letter to the president, exposes the fraud practiced by the Republicans on the farmer in tariff making.

"It is perfectly apparent," he writes, "that the tariff on most agricultural products does the farmer no good. It is economically impossible for a tariff to increase the price of wheat or anything else of which we produce more than we consume. Whenever we produce a surplus, the price of such articles must necessarily be fixed in the markets of the world. There is ample proof of this fact in the price movements of wheat and other agricultural products under both the emergency tariff and the Fordney-McCumber tariff.

"Obviously, then, the farmers of the country for the most part have received no benefit from the tariff on the things which they produce. On the other hand, the same tariff has either held up or increased the price of nearly everything that the farmer must buy to conduct his business.

"Inasmuch as the farmers for the most part have received no benefit from the tariff, it is unjust to force them to pay the higher prices for the things which they need to buy which are the direct result of the high tariff on such articles."

The case was never more simply or better put. But the only suggested remedy that the president has seemed to approve consisted solely of an increase in the tariff on wheat.

TRADE CONDITIONS

Notwithstanding the short crop of cotton this season, the price has ranged reasonably high and the merchants and other trade people around town report a very fair volumn of trade.

Nothing like a panic has developed yet and every one seems happy in the thought that business is not going to slump much.

The stores are resplendant with new goods and the clerks all seem to be fairly busy every day and worked to a frazzle on Saturday.

DRAINAGE MEETING CALLED

A meting of the Drainage Association is called to meet at the court house at 11 a. m. on Thursday, October 25.

Let every person who is interested in this most important question be on hand. The preliminary work that was done some time ago will be discussed and it is the desire of the leaders in the movement that the proper steps be now taken to put the drainage project into active operation.

This is a most important matter and we certainly hope that you all will go out and help to put it over. We must drain these swamps.

LET'S HAVE ACTION

[illegible] Writes Some Potent Highway Facts.

Why does the B. and M. highway sleep in Chilton County while there are as many as three or more projects under way in some other individual counties, or perhaps already completed therein? (I am not so conversant with some of the facts.) I think it is because we, in Chilton County, have never made any concerted effort to have anything done to our part of the road.

No one will deny that it is one of the most important projects in the entire state, being the main connecting link in the very center of the state, between the north and south and the ungoing link for some of the main trunks running east and west. In other words you might call it the keystone of the arch.

Even our creator, the Lord of the Universe, expects us to ask him for blessings and to thank him for them when we obtain them. Do we expect more than this of our commission? Other counties have been beseiging the old commission with large delegations representing whole counties and sometimes entire districts asking for what they wanted. At the same time, they have been bombarding them from a distance with letters from their officials and leading men of their communities, thus continuously keeping their needs and desires uppermost in the minds of the commission, while we as a community have been sitting idly by waiting for the "corn to be shelled" before we go to mill.

Now I suggest that at least one man from each town in Chilton County along the proposed highway together with one or more representatives from the official family of our county be sent to Montgomery to present to the commission the need of immediate action in the Chilton County project of the Birmingham-Montgomery highway.

What do you say?

A Resume of the More Important Events of Interest Condensed To An Eptiomized Form.

The amount available to the various counties from the general education fund of the state for the fiscal year 1923-24 is less by more than $300,000 than the fund for the year 1922-23. Figures furnished from the state department of education relates to the apportionment of the general education fund, otherwise known as the common school fund, showed that the total apportionment to counties for 1923-24 is $3,443,951.37, while for 1922-23 the amount was $3,861,816.42. The amount apportioned shows a decrease of 31 cents per capita, the per capita apportionment for 1923-24 being $4.33 against $4.59 for 1922-23. This is on the basis of the last enumeration, in 1923, which showed the number of school children with in the age limits prescribed by the constitution to be 759,605.

The fact that the Louisville and Nashville railroad has entered the market for a large tonnage of materials including 2,300 cars has interested Birmingham industrial circles very much. Coming simultaneously with the visit of President Mapother of that road and his associates as well as Henry Walters, the veteran chairman of the board, the information had special significance. The officials went to the Fairfield car works of the Tennessee Company and all of them showed interest and concern in he operations there.

Unusual efforts were made in the public schools at Decatur to impress the need of greater care against fires in homes and business houses during fire prevention week. Every teacher of the entire system was instructed on one of the days of the week to call the attention of the pupils of their respective rooms to the great saving made by fire prevention and the great losses sure to be incurred if there is continued carelessness as to the causes of fires.

The stockholders of a new company formed recently to promote the building of a cotton mill at Dadeville held a meeting last week at which several additional thousand dollars in stock was subscribed. Announcement has been made at division headquarters of the Alabama Power Company at Huntsville that the company has acquired the steam plant and electric franchise at Russellville and will add that town to the transmission system of this district.

The above illustration tells the story of Alabama's industries as they relate to the power which drives them. The meshing of the cogs transmits the force of one wheel to the other. Remove just one cog and you weaken the force. This is not an exaggeration. Every source of power must be conserved if the service is to be continuous and our factories and mines run full time, and additional industries are secured for our State.

Remove the Company's two largest reserve steam plants and you greatly impair the usefulness of the entire power system, for it is to these two plants that more than 210 major industries, representing an investment of $350,000,000, and employing 125,000 industrial workers, look for their power and sustenance during the long, dry months of our summers, when the rivers are low and coal is plentiful.

Alabama's progress and prosperity depend almost entirely on the continuous revolving of these two cog-wheels, a fact substantiated when an appeal was made in 1922 by the manufacturers of this State to the Federal Government to permit the Gorgas plant remaining a part of the existing power system of Alabama.

ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

To those who are interested in our State's industrial and agricultural progress, the recent action of the Government in selling its interest in the Gorgas plant to the Alabama Power Company, was a source of pride and satisfaction. (17)

THE PUBLIC AND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY

Profitable Investment.

When the state of Maine in 1838 sold Ogunquit beach, in the town of Wells, to a New Hampshire resident for $100, it disposed of a property which, since the popularity of the Maine shore as a summer resort became marked, has returned great profits. Now the owner, who has since sold to cottagers much of the property, threatens to sell the beach itself to persons who would close it to the public, and permanent and summer residents have asked the state to buy it back for $35,000.

The beach property was part of the Ferdinand Gorges grant in the early days of the colonization of the Maine coast. In 1646 the Gorges family disposed of it, and in 1678 the state of Massachusetts took over the property. In 1821 the new state of Maine bought half of it, acquiring the rest 30 years later.

After the sale of the property, residents formed the Ogunquit corporation, which has leased it for successive terms of years in order to keep it open to the public. The lease calls for a payment of $15,000 a year. Although the latest lease has several years to run, the owner has attacked its validity, claiming that the corporation has violated some of the terms of the contract.

Alliteration Record.

Miss Lora Whitmore, register of deeds, comes of a family of nine children. And the names in the family are all very similar. When the first three children arrived they were named in succession, Dora, Cora and Nora. This caused some comment in the neighborhood and a friend of the parents said: "That works all right for three children, but you are liable to run out of names that sound similar, if you have any more." Apparently this puts the parents on their mettle, because they solved the problem nicely. The next addition to the family was a pair of twins, a boy and a girl. So they were named Flora and Mora. After this there were four other girls born and they were promptly named Ora, Zora, Lora and Clora. If any family can beat this record for alliteration, step up and prove it.—Columbus (Kan.) Advocate.

National Music.

Those who are able to express simply and powerfully the music of different nations, and know how to listen to it as it deserves, need not make a tour of the world in order to visit their monuments, to read their books or to traverse their plains, their mountains, their gardens, and their wildernesses. A Jewish air at once transports us into the synagogue; a Scotland; while all Spain is revealed to us by a melody of that fair land.—George Sand.

Moving Day in Northern Virginia.

Among the volunteers who fought in the first battle of Bull Run was John A. Logan, then a member of congress from Illinois and later a major general and a senator from Illinois. As soon as General Logan saw that there was going to be some actual fighting near Washington he left the capital, got hold of a musket and walked all the way to Bull Run. There he joined Colonel Richardson's regiment and though he was in ordinary dress stood his ground as valiantly as anyone—and longer than most. In the end, however, there was nothing for him to do except to join the retreat. He found himself back in Washington the next morning.

Going up to the capitol, he was soon surrounded by a score or two of congressmen to whom he was describing incidents of the battle and of the rout.

"Who told you about all this?" asked one congressman who had come up too late to hear the beginning of Logan's story.

"Why, I was there myself," was the reply.

"You were there?" exclaimed the congressman. "Why, were the cars running out that way?"

"No," said Logan with a grim smile. "The cars were not running, but everything else in my vicinity was."—Youth's Companion.

St. Elmo's Fire.

The well-known phenomenon, St. Elmo's fire, which is a form of atmospheric electrical discharge, was recently observed aboard a steamer. During heavy rain squalls, accompanied by heat lightning, the port wire of the radio aerial aboard a steamer became illuminated for its entire length with a glowing white light, giving the wire a fuzzy appearance. This continued for about ten minutes, after which the light gradually faded from the ends of the wire and finally disappeared from the center of the aerial. The commasses were not affected.—Scientific American.

Never Missed.

The strict rules about bathing costumes that were adopted by the Virginia Baptists during their camp meeting at Virginia Beach led Judge Calhoun to say at a dinner in Norfolk:

"The Virginia Baptists acted very wisely. Some of the sights we used to see at Virginia Beach were truly shocking. They remind me of a story.

"A young wife called from her Virginia Beach bathhouse:

"'Oh, Jack, I can't find my bathing suit anywhere. What on earth shall I do?'

"'Look again, dear,' Jack called back. 'Maybe you've got it on.'"

Chances Are That ex-President Taft Was Wise in "Chopping Off" Just When He Did.

"Big Bill Taft was the lion of the London season," said a New York lawyer on his return from Europe.

"No wonder," he went on. "Mr. Taft is so likable, you know, so jolly.

"When I visited the Philippines Taft took our party out into the wilderness one week-end. We inspected everything. We even crowded into a native hut.

"The native woman received us kindly, of course. She was fully dressed, but her three little children were stark naked. Not a stitch.

"Commissioner Taft turned to our party and said with his rich, chuckling laugh:

"'Here we see, friends, the difference between barbarism and civilization. In this barbaric region the mothers are fully clothed while the children go naked, whereas in the civilized states of Europe and America the children are fully clothed and the mothers go—er—that is—but I'd better say no more.'"—Detroit Free Press.

As the motorcar drew up, the best man affixed behind it a long "streamer," with the words "Under new management" on it. Thus the amused passersby learned of the marriage, while the husband and wife were blissfully unconscious of what caused so much amusement.

Now, What—!

Benjamin J. Falk (famous photographer) relates a personal anecdote as follows:

"Many years ago a rather buxom and very pretty young woman came to the studio for a sitting. She carried a parcel, which, she explained, contained 'two waists, a high and a low-necked one,' and asked me before retiring to the dressing room which of them I advised her to wear for the portrait.

"As I had no idea what the draperies in her parcel looked like I replied, 'I can't tell about that before I see you in both.'

"Then the amazing thing happened. She blushed furiously, lowered her eyes, and all she said was: 'Then I'll put them both on at once.'"—New York Herald.

MAYOR THOMASON PRAISES TANLAC

Judge George Washington Thomason, Mayor of Tarrant City, Ala., and one of the most highly respected citizens of the state, is still another man of prominence and unimpeachable integrity to give his unqualified endorsement to Tanlac.

"Chronic indigestion brought me to the verge of a general break-down three years ago and nothing seemed to afford much relief," said Judge Thomason. "I could hardly eat enough to keep going, and became so weak and nervous I could hardly attend to my duties.

"Finally I started on Tanlac and six bottles fixed me up so fine that I felt ten years younger, and my good health still remains with me."

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"AND—DIE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle L'stron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. De Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admitted by Jean Lafitte, at his country house.

—7—

"And were he to order these young scions of the city's blue blood to polystone his decks, he would have to land in every isle of the Indies to settle the challenges! No, no—sir, Bonaparte is safe from these gentry!"

The two gentlemen smiled. But as they were to part, down the banquette of the rue Chartres came two figures, one supporting the other. A short, dark, ragged man whose gold earrings glistened under filthy locks, struggling to save his basket of cooked crayfish as he steered his companion on.

"Let be—" growled Gorgio, the Catalan. "Come, Jarvis—the Cafe des Refugies for you, man!"

"A ship!" bawled Jarvis. And being much the larger of the two he almost propelled the crayfish seller into the two elegant gentlemen, who stepped aside in disgust to let them pass.

"A ship! A rescue, old buccaneer!"

He lurched to the banquette, and sat there blinking. Old Gorgio hauled in vain at his sleeve. "Come, be up with me!"

But the town's first bohemian continued to fumble at his clothes.

"It was this way they went, Gorgio. I am even now on my way to the police to report of the affair. I shall appeal to the mayor—Rouillignac is not so dumb as to refuse rescue to a lady!"

"What does he babble of?" inquired Longhorne haughtily.

The painter got to his feet. He was bleeding from a gash across his brows. On his sleeve he laid a crushed and dirty camellia. Then, down the street came Mayor Rouillignac and Councilor Dominique to see what might be this public scandal. And to them Jarvis suddenly shouted his grievance.

"I was fumbling along the rue St. Peter in the mud, sober as any honest man, save that the moon kept diving past me. And there came a carriage that all but ran me down. The horses stumbled—and a lady screamed. She thrust an arm from the curtains—a white arm. I reached to touch. And a fellow within struck me . . . I got up later—I and my blossom. I swear she had more camellias in her hair! Oh, there—I have told it again! Now laugh, fools!"

"Where did you come upon this man, Monsieur Mudge?" said His Honor.

"Here, as you see—dirty and howling!" returned the merchant.

"Gorgio, take him home, and come to my clerk for a dollar," frowned the mayor. "It's drunkard's talk."

"Home?" blustered Jarvis. "A lady seized, spirited away in a galloping chaise through New Orleans' streets—and you say: 'Home!' Then romance is dead, sirs! I shall paint a fishwoman's shawl on my lady's head, and sorrow in her eyes. It was not so when Jean Lafitte was here!"

"You have dreamed—" muttered Dominique, watching him covertly. "Come with me, Jarvis."

"My skinned nose and brow—is that a dream?"

"He has stumbled nightlong about the streets," said Gorgio sullenly. Between the crayfish seller and the rotund alderman there shot glances of fleet understanding. The Catalan reached his hand to the painter and set upon him a look of implacable cy.

"Let be!" grunted Jarvis. "Camellias? Let's see? Why, Jean—last night—"

"Silence—fool!" whispered Gorgio. He seized upon the fellow; he bore him along with his bull-necked strength against his back.

"He is utterly drunk," murmured Dominique. "Come, gentlemen—let us to our morning coffee at Maspero's!" He took the mayor's arm, turning him hurriedly. A block distant the councilor looked back, fiddling with his velvet cuff nervously. The Catalan vagabond was dragging his comrade along.

But none save the alderman saw that the hand of the one-time buccaneer was under Jarvis' arm, that his knife-point pressed there until the coat was torn.

"A word more," hissed the crayfish seller, "and—die!" Then he whispered: "Sazarac . . . and the English woman? Jean—and the wager he won? Who, then, has a better right to the woman? Home, now!—get your paint pots and paint a poultice on your broken head!"

But Gorgio had to drag the unconscious wastrel up the studio stairs, and there lock him in ere he went to a whispered conference behind a cabbage stack in the French market.

CHAPTER VI

The Mask Is Dropped.

It was after the heat of that same day that two horsemen rode out from a courtyard of the Faubourg St. Marie upon the Tchoupitoulas road.

Count de Almonaster breathed relief when the river willows hid them and the steeds broke into a gallop.

"My blacks are waiting at the ferry," he murmured; "now, Captain Sazarac, did the plainsmen teach you to ride? Come, then!" And the guest led the way in a cloud of dust. A half-dozen slaves uprose as the two dashed over the levee, dismounted and flung rein to the grooms. Then the scow-boat swung off on the muddy Mississippi, propelled by the naked-backed oarsmen.

Sazarac stood watching the willowed shores. The city was invisible, but on the western bank arose the stately facades of plantation homes among great oaks. Beyond this,

"That You—of the Spanish Almonasters, of Wealth and Connections Beyond the Proudest in the City—Have Chosen to Idle Unattached—" glimpses of the grim, gray forest wall, the impenetrable cypress swamp, with its watery aisles leading to Barataria, the legend-haunted, even at this early day.

De Almonaster stepped ashore as the scow grounded, and led the way across the broad lawns to the high steps of the portioned gallery of the white mansion. Black boys dashed for the bridles. At the great glass doors arose a grizzled major-domo.

"At your pleasure, sir," said Raoul. "A drink shall be brought, and the bath."

"I have thought it strange"—Sazarac smiled absently—"that you—of the Spanish Almonasters, of wealth and connections beyond the proudest in the city—have chosen to idle unattached."

"I have my dream—" De Almonaster said gravely. "A boy's dream . . . but it does not pass. For six years now, the loveliest face that could stir youth has been with me. It was for that I cruised last year about the Caribbean ports—aimlessly seeking, slowly trying to forget. Ah, well! I am trying to be a practical, sober man—financing the new sugar process!"

With a bow he left the guest. The stranger looked from the great windows upon the gardens. Beyond the narrow fields ran a rutted road, and Jean Lafitte smiled. Up that same road had come the clumsy carts of the smugglers who met the gulf adventurers in the swamp rendezvous and brought the loot of silks and wines and jewels taken from luckless merchantmen on the Spanish Main. By pole-boat from the coast, by carts to the river forest; and then, at dead of night, ferried by other agents across to the warehouses of the city. And to Pierre Lafitte's cloaking smithy on the rue Bourbon came the winking merchants to watch the slaves work the forges while they slyly murmured to the proprietor: "I hear that a ship from Bilboa strangely foundered in Yucatan strait? . . . What, pray, is the price of brocade and silver plate at Monsieur Lafitte's Red house at Grand Terre?"

"Hypocritical dogs!" muttered the master now. "I respect the roguish scoundrel of my own band more than the smug merchants who enriched themselves on our traffic, covertly protecting us while they profited; eager to denounce us when our last ship was driven from the Gulf!"

The liquor decanter was on a high-boy of heavy rosewood. The adventurer's melancholy eyes lighted as he examined it, the great four-post bed, the table and the mirrors.

"Loot from the Isle o' Pines! I recall Gamble's sweating blacks poling it from the swamp to be sold to a city factor! It turns up at De Almonaster's and I am entertained with it!"

His laughter had hardly ceased when he joined his host at dinner. Never a more well-appointed guest had Count Raoul greeted than the last sea-rover who sat across the board beyond the golden candelabrum.

Monsieur Sazarac raised a hand. He held a glass before him.

"As to the wine, young sir, I could swear there had been mischief in the Gulf again!"

Raoul laughed ardently: "If ever, sir, one of my uncle's ships, which bring our wine from Bordeaux, had fallen your way, all the wars of Bonaparte had been nothing to the uproar he would have raised!"

"Come—" smiled the guest. "I would forget it all!"

"If we let you—" he signaled the serving men to withdraw. "Now, I am delegated by your own worthy companions for this—the Napoleon plot—is not that adventure enough?"

"More." Sazarac smiled distantly. "I am done with adventuring. I dream of a plantation in the Indies. In Louisiana, even if again granted amnesty, my presence would be a sore spot. Let any thieving brawl come in the ports, and at once Lafitte's old men are charged with it. They are peaceful men now, scattered on the coast—hunters, raisers of truck, and fishers. Let the dead past lie, my friend. I am an evil legacy . . . and I am forty-two!"

"And yet—the lady of the packet boat!" mused Raoul. "Strange?"

"To her, Sazarac, the gamester—to you, Lafitte, the outlaw. And yet—" the older man stopped, his gaze out the glass doors to the starlight.

"And yet, Monsieur— arac—what if you, of all men, brought Napoleon triumphantly out of exile to the New world? What proud lady of all Louisiana would not be thrilled by the name—Lafitte!"

"Now, that is ridiculous," frowned the other man. "She—an English Tory—an intrigue to aid Bonaparte win her approval?" He laughed: "Ah, well, a lovely lady for whom I would have fought; and I had to turn aside in silence. I am Lafitte. That is the irony of it—at forty-two, discredited, a fugitive under a mask . . . and she smiled upon the man who is the knave in either role. I did not challenge Colonel Carr," he concluded pointedly.

"I saw that." Raoul repressed his curious note. "We knew you went to confront him," He shrugged. "Come, my Captain Jean! I, too, have grently loved—and lost. Now, this affair is of the sea and men. Would you not listen? You heard last night your old wild fellows chuckling with it!"

The guest stared hard at him. "Napoleon? The devil they would care for him! Tooth and nail on the first merchantman—loot, scurry, spend fistfuls of gold in the ports of South America—and then the yard-arm for them all! Monsieur, the world has shuffled off our gentlemen of fortune!"

"It is the English woman holds you from us," said Raoul, and then saw the black line deepen on the other's brow. The host bit his lip; and then upon the silence, there came rapid footsteps. A doorman was expostulating at the broad gallery. There was a scuffle, an oath.

"But I shall enter, fellow! Out of the door!"

De Almonaster had arisen by the silver-laden board, with a hasty glance at his guest's impassive face under the golden candelabrum, when the burly grizzled Johanness charged from the hallway. He turned without greeting, staring at Sazarac.

"You, Captain Jean! See, I have fought for you! A customs guard, I think it was, went down by the cut-ss. Nez Coupe, Bohon and I stopped them from the first crossing, but the dragoons are here!"

"And that he is in reality Jean Lafitte, turned up from the dead."

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 21

ISRAEL IN THE MIDST OF THE NATIONS

LESSON TEXT—Josh. 1:1-4; Isa. 2:2-4; Isa. 19:23-25; Ezek. 5:5.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." —Isa. 45:22.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Beautiful Land of Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Land God Chose for His People.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Israel in the Midst of the Nations.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Strategic Position of Palestine.

I. Israel's Geographical Position (Josh. 1:1-4, cf. Ezek. 5:5).

Israel, God's chosen and most favored nation, the nation to whom He came nearest and gave most in order that it might pass on His goodness to the other nations of the world, was given a most strategic position in the earth. "Palestine was adapted as no other country for God's great purpose of preparing a pure religion and spreading it to all the world. To this end a single nation was selected, trained and placed in the center of the world, so that when the time came to publish the true religion all lands could be reached. Palestine was central and isolated, yet accessible, for when the time came for the apostles to go from Palestine by the Mediterranean sea to the lands round about it, and from there to other lands, their way was open."

1. Their Leader (Josh. 1:1). Joshua was Moses' assistant. He led the Israelites to victory over the Amalekites soon after their escape from Egypt. He was with Moses in the Mount when the law was given. He was one of the spies sent into the land of Canaan. When Moses knew that his time of departure was nigh he appointed Joshua his successor.

2. Condition of the Possession of the Land (v. 3). The land was theirs by God's promise, but it became theirs only as their feet advanced to take possession of it. Because of their lack of faith, courage and obedience they never enjoyed the full possession of it. Christians today lack the riches of the Heavenly Father's blessings because of their want of faith and courage.

3. Its Boundaries (v. 4). On the north it was bounded by the rugged mountains of Lebanon; on the east by the Euphrates river; on the south by the "great and terrible" desert, a barren region through which the children of Israel had wandered for forty years; and on the west by the Mediterranean sea. It included all of Mesopotamia. Israel's lack of faith prevented them from possessing fully this land.

II. Israel's Spiritual and National Position (Isa. 2:2-4; 19:23-25)

This pictures the place of influence which shall be exercised by Israel in a future time.

1. When It Shall Be (v. 2)—"in the last days." By "last days" is usually meant in Scripture the times of the Messiah, for this is the primary subject of all prophecy.

2. What It Shall Be (v. 2). The restoration of the kingdom of Judah to the place of pre-eminence among the nations of the world. "Mountain" in Scripture symbolizes kingdom (see Dan. 2:35; Rev. 18:1, 17:9-11). This vision of Zion's glory refers to the millennial age, at which time other nations of the world will learn of the true God through the chosen nation.

3. The Result of (vv. 2-4). The return of God's favor to this chosen people shall be "life from the dead." To the nations of the earth (Rom. 11:15). (1) Nations shall flow unto it (v. 2). This pictures the masses of the people moving toward Jerusalem like streams from all parts of the earth. (2) Nations encouraging each other (v. 3). All jealousies are now taken from nations, and with good will to each other they are moving to Jerusalem, the world's capitol. They are going there to be taught of God the right ways to walk. They go to be instructed out of His holy Word. There is but one way to peace in the world, that is, back to God through His holy Scriptures. (3) Peace in the earth (v. 4). When Isreal shall be in her God-appointed place with Jesus Christ as king, then war will be over. The implements of war will then be destroyed. (4) Friendly communication (Isa. 19:23-25). As soon as wickedness is taken from men's hearts they will establish means of friendly communication.

Good Tidings.

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings.—Isa. 52:7.

Holy Scripture.

Holy Scripture is a stream of running water, where alike the elephant may swim, and the lamb walk without losing its feet.—Gregory the Great.

Cultivated Countries.

Countries are well cultivated, not as they are fertile, but as they are free.—Montesquieu.

Worship.

Be not so bigoted to any custom as to worship it at the expense of truth.—Zimmerman.

Entered in the Postoffice at Clanton, Alabama, as Second Class Mail Matter Under Act of Congress.

What's the matter with the Al Smith boom? It must have been still born.

Desperation has led many a crook to take chances that finally headed him into his finish.

If good churches and good schools mean anything Clanton can easily classify as A. No. 1.

The Oklahoma legislature has got Gov. Walton "sitting on a red hot stove and stirring constantly."

Just after the election a great cry went up in certain quarters regarding a contest, "Let 'er come." Well, "She's" coming.

The election of a man 80 years of age to the United States Senate would be a graceful compliment but a very poor stroke of business judgment.

J. Thomas don't stack up very much with the capitalists but when it comes to the farming and laboring element it will take a hard jolt to jar him loose.

Senator J. Thos. Heflin writes us that he will come over and visit us ... in November. "Cotton Tom" will get a rousing reception in Chilton county.

Clanton is getting more citified and more law abiding every day now. We should all be proud of our town now and help boost it every day and in every way.

With ten barbers at work in Clanton it is a very rare occurrence when you can get a shave without waiting your turn. The female patrons are beginning to mean something.

The preacher said he was looking on the face of a great bunch of crooks last Sunday afternoon. If he was, it was the biggest hearted set of crooks he ever saw.

Long lanes almost always have a turning. Long years of successful political trickery are like that, and when the turning comes the traveler usually plunges into a bottomless pit called oblivion.

Some wonderful gospel sermons are being preached by Dr. Sledge during the Baptist revival and are drawing immense crowds and much interest.

"You can fool all of the people some of the time, some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all the people all of the time." Exposure and retribution will come in the end.

The innocent credulity of the average Chilton county voter is not near so prominent as it was a few years ago. The majority of them demand a reasonable reason for their faith these days.

There are some things that plain nerve and bull can put over in little county affairs, but when it comes to butting up against Uncle Sam it will pay you to always take your medicine according to directions.

The little leak that sprung in Sheriff Littlejohn's prohibition dam about three weeks ago was discovered and repaired by him last week. Saturday night and Sunday a Sahara dryness brooded over the scene again.

The Jefferson county grand jury investigation of the Banner mine munity will open up again this week. Turn on the light and let the public know what is going on. The people have a right to know all of the truth.

The failure of county cattle tick inspectors to get either cash or comfort for their work in the past was eliminated by the visit of Drs. Cary and Jackson last Saturday and in future the county will come across with the cash for this work.

In lieu of a state fair this year Birmingham will give a "Fall Festival" from Oct. 29 to Nov. 3. It will be a wonderful home exhibit and will be worth the visit of every citizen in Alabama from an educational standpoint.

THAT TICK MEETING

Last Saturday forenoon Drs. Cary and Jackson, state and federal managers of the Tick Eradication campaign respectively, met with the ... of County Commissioners, and a ... assemblage of citizens at the court house, for the purpose of arriving at a definite and conclusive understa... in regard to the real status of the unfortunate question in our county.

Our county has been needl... to ... and trouble and our county trea... has been ruthlessly gutted. ... some of our people have been ... guided, mislead and misinformed in regard to this matter from almost the very beginning of the effort to exterminate the tick.

The dipping of cattle has never been a popular pasttime with our farmers, while at first, the great majority of them bowed to the law and were faithful in their efforts to comply with its mandates. Had this effort been properly backed up by our county officials and the few remaining infected areas been thoroughly cleaned out, as they promised faithfully to do, the tick would have been eradicated, the quarantine would have been ... and our county would have been given a clean bill of health by the federal ... with the exception of one infected spot in the county, so far as the evidence goes to ... no particular nor concent... was ever taken and no inspections made by competent parties to see that the work was be... Under such slack con... the inevitable ... infection spread ... federal ... here to re... found our cat... ping was eve... conclusion, the quarantine was ... the Federal Agricultural Department that we must clean ... the ...

A large number of citizens who had complied with the law and who had really eradicated the tick from their neighborhoods, naturally became sore and disgruntled because they were forced to suffer again along with the guilty and had to pay over again for this glaring inefficiency.

A local campaign was pending just ahead and, a certain political fac... played up to this di... and charged, fore and aft, that the Democratic party was responsible for cattle dipping. This had the desired effect in certain quarters where the people had not informed themselves of the truth of the matter and much bitterness was engender...

The Chilton County ..., at once, wrote to the Federal Dep... ment and secured copies of the Federal cattle dipping laws and printed them in our honest effort to let the people have the truth. The people of Chilton county had already voted overwhelming against the dipping of cattle, but they had to dip just the same, and this very fact should have conclusively sho... every one of them that local politics and the dipping of cattle were two entirely separate and distinct propositions.

To make the situation more unfortunate our Probate Judge, who ... a candidate for reelection, promulgated the statement through his official organ and by ... ular letter all over the county, that he would go to jail before he ordered any more cattle dipped in the county. By this statement he boldly expressed his determin... to violate the law person... and tacitly inculcated a like spirit in some of his followers. They felt perfectly safe, after listening to such doctrine as this, in imitating their trusted leader and resisting the law.

We feel like that, perhaps, no other contributing cause has been so potent as this one statement of our Probate Judge, in influencing the spirit of lawlessness that blows up dipping vats. Our county is still paying in dollars and cents a heavy toll for such sentiments as these.

Perhaps the truth will dawn now in the minds of these people who have been so unfortunately led into dangerous and grevious errors and we can go forward, in an orderly and law abiding way in the final cleaning up the tick and the removal from our county of this terribly unfortunate condition.

We are informed that the commissioners have now agreed to pay for ... and to cooperate with them ...

Cary and Jackson came up and made the necessity of this course so very pla... those whose duty it is to enforce the law, that no excuse can be read red in ... disagreeable ... compelled to pa... three times over ... high time that they were beginning to receive some real ... from the outlay.

At present the prospective race for governor of Alabama seems to promise a very lively scrimmage. Bibb Graves, Chas. McDowell and Donald Comer are accused of casting longing eyes on that plum. Either of these gentlemen is competent.

WALTON APPEARS DONE FOR

In the language of the street, it looks as if Gov. Jack (Iron Man) Walton of Oklahoma, is reaching the end of his political career. He con[illegible] courts through injunctions and otherwise to prevent his repudiation by the people from going into effect. It is apparent that because of his arbitrary action in matters affecting the sentiments and interests of the people, as they view the situation, they made up their minds to get rid of him. They held an election to pass upon a constitutional amendment providing that the legislature could assemble and function without a formal call from the governor. This Walton vigorously opposed, even to the point of military force; but the election was held, the proposed amendment was adopted by an overwhelming majority, and now the legislature is called to take up the question of impeaching Governor Walton and some of his political henchmen. The governor adopted every conceivable means to prevent the legislative assembly, among other things at[illegible] He called [illegible] and declared [illegible] Walton [illegible] the will [illegible] action. the heavy [illegible] would assist him, is [illegible] Oklahoma to [illegible] of his policies, [illegible] prevent the [illegible] constitutional amendment [illegible] speech or his unsuccessful [illegible] attack the press. Increased Driving Comfort Provided in Buick "Fours"

In adjusting the position of the driving seat, in lowering the steering column and in bringing the shift lever and emergency brake within the easiest possible reach of the driver's hand, Buick has provided additional comfort and satisfaction in the new four-cylinder models. Ease of handling is also an outstanding feature of the new Buick "four". In heavy traffic the abundant power of the famous valve-in-head engine and the quickness with which the car responds to every control enable it to glide in and out of traffic with the utmost facility, while Buick four-wheel brakes assure perfect braking and safety under all conditions.

RUDYARD KIPLING ON LYING

Mr. Rudyard Kipling says: "The first use man made of the power of speech when he evolved from [illegible] was to lie. [illegible] meeting of the world's first liar with the world's second liar, but from what we know of their descendants today they were probably of opposite sex and married at once and began a numerous progeny."

Lying is poor business, rightfully despised by all people, except when practiced [illegible] would do as well. It is the shame of the human species that there are so many [illegible] on oath when their interests are at stake; and even some who could not be believed on oath whether their interests were at stake or not. They enjoy it.

FOOTBALL GAME

Last Friday the Chilton County High went down to Wetumpka and played the Fifth District Agricultural school on the Gridiron of the latter's [illegible] in it. Both teams played to win and the pig skin changed from one to the other quite often.

No touch down was made in the first quarter but the Agricultural boys went over the goal during the second quarter. The Chilton High put on more steam to the already high pressure [illegible] as any team ever gave a player in a tight Jack Hayes made a run for more than forty yards taking the ball [illegible] the goal for old Chilton. Up to time the Wetumpka "Rooters" had [illegible] up plenty of good support on the side lines for the home team, but [illegible] present for the Chilton High broke loose with so much enthusiasm until Wetumpka no doubt thought that half of the Chilton county people were on the scene.

The Agricultural team had one fake play that bothered the Chilton High, but when it came to a show down old Chilton held their feet to the fire. The [illegible] a good deal of the time.

MRS. HINCKLEY NERVOUS WRECK

Tells Women How She Was Restored to Perfect Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Memphis, Tenn.—"Two years ago I was completely run-down and my nerves were a wreck. I could not sweep a room without resting. I could not do my work except a little at a time, and the doctor's medicine did not help me. One day some one threw your little book on to my porch, and in it I read several testimonials of women who had been like myself. I went right out and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken the whole of that bottle I knew it was helping me. I took six bottles, and then in about three months I took two more. Now I am in perfect health. I do all of my own work and could do more. I can truly say that I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gave me my health."—Mrs. O. J. HINCKLEY, 316 Union Ave., Memphis, Tenn.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Germany Having a Hard Time With Monarchists, Reds and Industrial Barons.

POINCARE REBUFFS BERLIN

Conducts Direct Negotiations in the Ruhr—Important Plans Discussed by British Imperial Conference—Doings of the American Federation of Labor.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

"ANY man who would make predictions for Germany beyond tomorrow is mad," cables a Berlin correspondent. Events in that distracted country have been moving rapidly toward a climax which Chancellor Stresemann fears and frankly says may be a catastrophe unless immediate measures are taken and they prove successful. Even before these reaches the reader the situation may be entirely changed, for the better or, if possible, for the worse. Only the happenings of last week can be recorded.

The Socialists yielded to Stresemann's insistence on the "authorization law" which will permit legislation by the cabinet without reference to parliament, and the chancellor thereupon formed a new cabinet to operate as a directorate, in which are represented the Socialist Democratic, Center and People's parties. The monarchists and Communists are excluded. On Tuesday he submitted the new government's policies to the reichstag and was given an overwhelming vote of confidence, only the Nationalists, Communists and Bavarian Volkspartei opposing. The chancellor declared he was not seeking negotiations with France alone but only with all the allies; that he had no intention of abolishing private property but intended that the great properties should take their share of the financial burden of the state; and that Germany stood back of her signature on the Versailles treaty. Stresemann severely criticized the Cuno government's refusal to abandon the passive resistance on the advice of England three months ago when it still was possible to obtain concessions from France. He declared hard words and threats in protest against France's action in the Ruhr were useless.

Then came forward Stinnes, the Krupps, Thyssen and the other industrial magnates with an attack on the cabinet and a list of demands on Stresemann which included an eight and one-half hour day in the coal mines, ten hours in the mills and the abandonment of the coal tax. Until these measures are granted, they said, they could not bring the cost of coal down to the world market price at the pithead. Their other demands amounted to the revocation of all privileges won by labor during the last twenty years. In reply the chancellor sent Minister of the Interior Solmann into the reichstag to announce that these demands of the coal and steel magnates for measures to fill their pockets would not be considered by the government. The country was enraged by the stand of the industrial barons. The press branded them as traitors and the Communists introduced a bill demanding their trial on charges of high treason.

MEANWHILE the Stinnes group and the Otto Wolff trust were conducting negotiations with the French in the Ruhr independent of their government. When the German cabinet officials in Paris submitted to Premier Poincare the proposition of Chancellor Stresemann for a conference of France, Belgium and Germany in the occupied zone to arrange for the resumption of work, the premier rejected the plan, explaining that Germany had always contended that passive resistance in the Ruhr was local and that now France was negotiating direct accords with the industrial leaders there and with the local labor organizations. He said, however, he was ready to examine any proposals regarding reparations payments which Berlin might make directly to the reparations commission. The German government was deeply chagrined by this rebuff, since it had officially abandoned passive resistance.

When the authorization bill was called up in the reichstag Thursday the first and second paragraphs were voted by a large majority, but when the measure as a whole came up for a final vote the entire National party walked out, leaving the reichstag without a quorum. Adjournment was taken until Saturday. If Chancellor Stresemann should fail to secure the necessary two-thirds vote for the bill he is authorized by President Ebert to dissolve the reichstag.

These varied complications brought about a panic on the Berlin bourse that carried the mark down to the ridiculous figure of 7,000,000,000 to the dollar. The shops doubled all their prices and the people rushed about trying to get rid of their practically worthless paper money. The Communist leaders were making the most of the situation and were hopeful that the prospect of a winter of hunger and cold, together with the anger of the workers against the industrial leaders, would enable them to set up a revolutionary government. Documents seized at communist headquarters at Breslau revealed a plot to overthrow the Stresemann government and an attempt to organize a communist state by force or arms. More than fifty persons were arrested. Indeed, the Red peril in Germany was greater than at any time in the past. That Soviet Russia is well informed of the conditions and ready to help the Communists is indicated by the concentration of large bodies of soviet troops near the western border of Russia.

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, now in Canada on his American tour, has no hesitation in expressing the opinion that wars are not done with and that the next war may wipe out our civilization. His view of European affairs is rather pessimistic, and his main hope is that the British empire, which he calls the one effective league of nations in the world today, will make itself so strong that when it says "Halt!" the other nations will hear it. Such, in a way, is the purpose of the imperial conference being held in London. Plans were laid last week for making the empire an economic unit and for tying up trade so that none but subjects of the empire would benefit. These plans include a purchasing pool for empire food and raw material and a distribution scheme for Great Britain; ways for insuring empire preference on public contracts and for developing outlying regions with the help of British money, and plans for providing an immediate market for British manufactures and the employment of British labor.

The empire premiers are not united on many subjects and some of them have been severely criticising some of Premier Baldwin's policies and acts.

REFUSING to be swayed from its traditional policy by the successes of the Farmer-Labor party in the Northwest, the American Federation of Labor in convention at Portland, Ore., voted decisively against resolutions calling on labor to unite with the farmers in forming a new national party. Of the 114 international unions, state federations and city councils on the roll call, all but 27 voted to indorse the report of the resolutions committee which said: "Experience has demonstrated that any attempt to mass and direct the potential and actual power of the wage earners through any form of fixed party scheme is to destroy that efficiency that comes from flexible mobility of power to meet whatever emergency may arise and from whatever source it may emanate. The policy and practice of the American Federation of Labor [illegible] to principles and not to be partisan to political parties has been fully justified by experience."

After a stormy debate the convention refused to recognize the soviet government of Russia, declaring the people of Russia must first be given a chance to vote on indorsement or repudiation of their present rulers. The bolshevik, however, had the support of some prominent delegates.

When the prohibition question was taken up there was more nearly complete unanimity. With only one dissenting vote the convention adopted an appeal to congress to change the Volstead act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer.

GOVERNOR WALTON of Oklahoma abandoned his attempt to head off impeachment proceedings by the legislature, and himself called that body in extra session. When it met on Thursday he sent in a message strongly urging the passage of his bill for the unmasking of the Ku Klux Klan in the state. He had previously promised that if the bill were passed he would resign, but the lower house went ahead with its plan, resolving itself into an inquisitorial body to investigate the governor's official conduct. The most serious of the charges against him are that he has exceeded his parole and pardon authority, misused public moneys and usurped constitutional rights by denying the right of recourse to habeas corpus under his decree of martial law. The inquiry is likely to last a long time, and then the senate will sit as a trial body if the house votes an impeachment.

ANOTHER governor who is having a mighty hard time is McCray of Indiana. His financial embarrassments have been before the public for weeks and it is charged there were irregularities in the signing of notes which he negotiated. He has not, at this writing, been indicted, but bankruptcy proceedings have been instituted and civil suits against him started. A grand jury is conducting an investigation and Mr. McCray says he is willing to tell it all the facts. In general he denies any wrongdoing and blames "political blackmail" for his troubles.

IT IS authoritatively announced at the White House that President Coolidge believes industry throughout the United States is generally prosperous, that business conditions are promising and that the outlook is highly satisfactory. He has received reports of the satisfactory condition of many agricultural products, especially corn, of good markets for cattle and of fair prices for hogs. The fruit situation has been handicapped by a car shortage, but the Department of Agriculture is co-operating with the railroads, growers' organizations and others to relieve the strain. The textile and steel industries are doing fairly well; some mining industries are not so prosperous; the Oklahoma oil region is having difficulties owing to the large oil production farther west.

"IRRECONCILABLES" of the senate were much pleased by intimations, which were almost official assurances, that President Coolidge has no intention of taking a hand in the foreign situation by urging the Hughes plan, which calls for an unbiased commission to determine Germany's ability to pay the reparations. Mr. Lloyd George has indorsed this plan and it is favored by most of the European nations though France will have none of it. It was said also that Mr. Coolidge sees no advantage to be gained in the calling of an economic conference of the world powers until there is a change in conditions in Europe.

TEIXEIRA GOMEZ, the new president of Portugal, finds that he, like most of his predecessors, is sitting on an earthquake. Already there have been two revolutionary outbreaks against his administration, and another is expected any day. His enemies predict that he will soon be either assassinated or driven out of the country.

HENRY FORD says his offer for the purchase of Muscle Shoals is still before congress and will not be withdrawn. He blames Secretary of War Weeks and political influences for the fact that his bid was not accepted and for the sale of the part of the plant known as the Gorgas steam plant, which was included in Mr. Ford's offer.

Hopewell, Va.—This famous Dupont gunpowder town, that suddenly sprang up and gave employment to thousands during the World War, was eight years old in April. Most of the families that came in war times have gone, but many bought homes and remained. Among the first arrivals were Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Trevathan, of Vermont, who bought property here and now have a pleasant home in Battle Ground Annex.

In a recently-given statement, Mrs. Trevathan said: "At times I have had such severe pains in my sides I did not know what to do. I am a trained nurse by profession, and nursed until I married. I was on my feet a great deal and this seemed to aggravate my trouble.

"One day I read about Cardui in the paper at my home in Vermont. I got a bottle and tried it. It has done me a great deal of good. . . The pains in my side used to grow very intense. I would take the Cardui by the directions and it helped me wonderfully. . . My appetite grew very poor. I did not care for anything to eat, but when I took a few doses (of Cardui) my appetite picked up. I wouldn't be without it."

Mrs. Trevathan said she had recommended Cardui to a great many women whom she had nursed—"and always with beneficial results." "I am glad to give this statement," she said, "so that other women may know about the wonderful benefits of Cardui." At all druggists.

Farming Adapted to Given Region

In Making Change Physical Factors Such as Soil and Climate Are Important.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

To stick to cotton or to change to corn and hogs, to grow wheat and oats or to go into dairying, or to change to any other type of farming which may at the time seem to offer more profitable returns than the prevailing type, is a question ever present in great farming regions, and one which is often keenly considered in time of agricultural depression. In attempting to make such changes serious errors are almost certain to be made, says the United States Department of Agriculture, unless those who are directing the movement have a thorough understanding of the forces which control the types of farming adapted to the different regions.

Enterprises Best Adapted.

It is possible, at least in a general way, says the department, to determine what farm enterprises are adapted to a region by studying the physical, biological, and economic conditions prevailing there, and the adaptability of various enterprises to these conditions. An analysis of the types of farming in the United States has been made on this basis and the discussion is presented in Farmers' Bulletin No. 1230, Distribution of Types of Farming in the United States, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Physical factors such as soil and climatic conditions play an important part in the type of farming adaptable to a given region. Temperature limits the northern distribution of cotton, southern distribution of wheat, and northern distribution of corn. Rainfall and length of growing season are other important factors the effects of which are very apparent in our agriculture.

Factors of Second Class.

The second class of factors discussed in the bulletin is called biological factors. The effect of the boll weevil in reducing cotton acreage near the Gulf and Atlantic coasts is an example. The chinch bug has reduced the acreage of corn in southern Illinois, and the Hessian fly has changed the date of seeding winter wheat and has probably reduced the acreage of this crop in some localities. Many other cases are cited in which insect pests and fungous diseases are determining factors.

In the third class are economic factors, such as cost of transportation and distance from market. Another important one is competition with regions which can produce more cheaply. This last is a factor in limiting the acreage of corn, oats, wheat, barley, and rye in those parts of New England where these crops thrive.

The bulletin aims to make clear the part these fundamental factors play in determining the possibility of establishing on a profitable basis a new or different type of farming, and to show that the kind of farming which prevails is based on them, rather than on the desires or whims of the farmers. A copy of the bulletin may be secured from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., as long as the supply lasts.

Internal Freezing Does Much Harm to Potatoes

Internal freezing injury, or frost necrosis, occurs when potatoes are exposed to severe frosts, temperatures below twenty-eight degrees Fahrenheit. The tubers show dark blotches in the flesh when they are cut open and allowed to stand a short time. The spots are usually most marked at the stem end, but they are scattered irregularly through the outer flesh or in a fine network or ring. Ordinarily the injury is detected only upon cutting, although the affected tubers wilt more than the normal ones in storage.

Potatoes may actually be frozen solid throughout, becoming soft and mushy on thawing. As a result of coming in contact with a cold wall in storage, or being left above the ground before digging, potatoes may freeze on one side. Tubers injured in this way are easily sorted out.

"Turning sweet" is due to prolonged storage at low temperatures, twenty-nine to thirty-four degrees Fahrenheit, not to real freezing. Tubers that have never been frost bitten may show this injury.

Have a good thermometer in the room where potatoes are stored and keep the temperature above twenty-eight degrees Fahrenheit.

When shipping potatoes during cold weather in a heated car, provide for some circulation of air from the stove to prevent black heart in the potatoes near the heat and frost injury in those in the outer parts of the car.

Ducks Kept on Average Farms of Mixed Breeds

There are eleven standard breeds of ducks which have been admitted to the American standard of perfection. These breeds may be divided into three classes: (1) The meat class, including the Pekin, Aylesbury, Muscovy, Rouen, Cayuga, Buff and Swedish; (2) the egg class, represented by the Runner; and (3) the ornamental class, composed of the Call, the Crested White and the Black East India. The ducks commonly kept on many farms are of mixed breeding, and are generally of small size, poor layers, and undesirable types of market duck. Except the Muscovy, all our economic breeds of ducks are said to have originated from the mallard or wild duck.

Fall or Winter Best Time to Fight Borer

Canes Infested Should Be Cut Before Bugs Emerge.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Fall or winter is the best time to apply control measures to raspberry, blackberry or dewberry crops infested by the red-necked raspberry caneborer, according to Farmers' Bulletin 1236, by F. H. Chittenden, entomologist. The damage to these crops is caused by a flat-headed, milk-white borer, which is the larva of a small, slender, velvet-black beetle with coppery red or golden thorax ("neck"). The larvae form irregular swellings or galls, which gradually enlarge the canes and split the bark. Canes thus infested die, or become weakened and fall to develop a crop. The beetle also does some injury by feeding on the leaves of the plants.

To control the insect the infested canes should be cut out in the fall or winter, or in the early spring before the beetles have emerged from them. All cuttings should be promptly burned. To insure thoroughness, all wild blackberry, raspberry or dewberry plants nearby should receive the same attention. Co-operation among neighboring fruit growers in the observance of these measures for successive years is highly desirable.

Farmers' Bulletin 1236 may be obtained by applying to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Scab Seriously Reduces Yield of Wheat Crop

Scab seriously reduces the yield of wheat in infected fields throughout the central states and eastward. And it not only affects wheat, but other grains and grasses as well. The cause of this disease is a tiny fungous parasite, which grows in the wheat plant a little like the wheat plant itself grows in the soil, and this parasite destroys the parts of the wheat plant in which it grows.

The same parasite also grows on corn, and naturally wheat following corn may be seriously affected by scab. In order to control the disease the United States Department of Agriculture recommends that the farmer—

(1) Avoid sowing wheat after corn unless the cornstalks are removed and the stubble completely plowed under.

(2) Plow under all crop refuse and clean up the old straw and grasses along the fence rows and in nearby waste places.

(3) Use clean seed of adapted varieties. Seed should be thoroughly cleaned, graded and treated.

(4) Sow wheat when the ground is cool, winter wheat on the latest date in the fall, and spring wheat on the earliest safe date in the spring.

If you are interested in making a more thorough study of the scab problem write to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and ask for Farmers' Bulletin 1224, Wheat Scab and Its Control.

Many Injurious Insect Pests May Be Destroyed

Since many troublesome insects hibernate in dead plants and trash and in grass and weeds along the borders of cultivated land, H. A. Gossard, entomologist of the Ohio experiment station, states that large numbers of them may be destroyed in late fall or very early spring by burning the collected trash and dead grass.

Tarnished plant bugs, squash bugs, and slugs are cited as examples. These pests pass the winter in weedy borders, among refuse, under stones and other objects. They could be almost entirely eliminated if entire communities would co-operate in removing all means for their protection during winter.

Potato stalks, squash vines, onion tops, asparagus plants, bean and pea vines, and the like furnish shelter during the winter for many insects that feed upon these plants.

Fall plowing, where soil conditions permit the practice, will result in the destruction of many cutworms, white grubs, corn ear worms, army worms, and eggs of the grasshopper, where these pests are numerous.—Weekly Press Bulletin, Ohio experiment station.

Too Much Moisture Will Cause Potatoes to Decay

An excess of moisture will cause the growth of decay in the potato storage. Some growers make a practice of "curing" their potatoes before storing. This is done by piling them in piles of 30 bushels or more, and covering them with the potato vines. After the potatoes are well dried so there is no excess moisture, and are free from dirt, they may be placed in storage. Sometimes the ventilators of the storage are left open for several days after storage to facilitate drying. Care should be used, however, that potatoes in storage do not become too dry, as they may wilt or shrivel.

Right Place to Select Seed Corn Is in Field

It is a well-known fact that the best place to select seed corn is in the field. The best time to pick it is when the earliest ears are ripe. Don't wait till every ear is fully matured, as that may mean injury from frost. Besides, it is always desirable to pick from the ears that ripen first, so as to encourage early maturity.

DAIRY HINTS

Dairyman's Formula for Milk of Good Quality

"Feed, weed and breed" is the dairyman's magic formula for good milk, according to M. H. Keeney, dairy specialist of the New Jersey State Agricultural college, in a statement stressing the present market demand for cheaper milk.

"The market will not pay a big price for milk," writes Mr. Keeney, "so we dairymen must cut our production costs. The two factors controlling the economical production of milk are the adaptability of the cow for giving milk, judged by her conformation, and by the milk scales and the Babcock test, and the amount and kind of food taken. The feed bill is the largest direct expense, and the dairyman's high road to success lies in producing a unit of clean, wholesome milk for the least possible cost.

"The first essential for good milk is good cows, the other is proper feed and care—it may be summarized briefly in three words, feed, weed and breed. Silage and alfalfa hay are the best for cheap milk, and they are the best and cheapest roughage feeds. Every dairyman should have them and should follow these directions:

"Feed all the roughage a cow will clean up. Part of it should be a legume, such as clover or alfalfa.

"Keep a balanced ration.

"Give sufficient feed, such as silage or roots.

"Feed grain in accordance with milk production—for a Holstein or Ayrshire, approximately one pound of grain for each three pounds of milk. A variety of grains in the mixture is desirable.

"Feed and milk regularly.

"Give plenty of fresh water at all times.

"Give access to salt daily.

"Buy grain feeds on the basis of their protein and energy, not simply by the hundredweight."

Bred Heifers Are Often Best Buy for Dairyman

What age of heifer is the best buy is a question frequently asked of the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca.

The men there who are giving thought to herd improvement explain the advantages and disadvantages in the purchase at all three of the ages, as baby calves, as yearlings, and as bred heifers.

Baby calves are cheaper and more easily shipped. However, they are somewhat less likely to live than older stock; and further, there is more uncertainty as to how they will develop.

With yearlings, the chances of living are better, and the type is more likely to be fixed, yet a long time still remains before they will be productive. But since yearling heifers may sell at a disadvantage, they may be a good purchase.

Bred heifers are frequently the best buy. They are developed as to size, and the possibilities for milk production can be estimated. Their mortality rate should be low; and the cost of carrying to production is slight. They may even be worth a slight premium where there is a good market for milk, and it is desired to establish a herd promptly.

Timothy Is Not Favored as Feed for Dairy Cows

Timothy hay is all too frequently fed to dairy cows. There is only one occasion when its use for this purpose can be developed—when the cows are to be dried off. Where dairy cattle are being fed and timothy hay is the only dry roughage available, it should be sold and clover or alfalfa purchased. Timothy is generally quoted on the central markets as high or even higher than the legume hays, and the dairyman can well afford to make the exchange even though he has the hauling to pay. The improvement obtained in production will be remarkable, and will generally mean all the difference between paying to keep the cows and allowing the cows to aid in supporting you.

Cleanliness Important in Production of Milk

Cleanliness is the most important factor in the production of clean wholesome milk. Much of the dirt and filth that gets into milk and produces deterioration, comes from improper methods of handling after being drawn.

However, brushing off the loose dirt and dust about the flanks and udder and wiping the udder with a dry cloth materially assists in lessening the danger of dirt getting into the milk at milking. Cows during the summer season, if stabled at night or confined to a yard, become more or less dirty about their rear quarters and should be well cleaned before being milked.

Calf Needs Much Care.

Very young dairy calves demand skillful attention in order to grow and develop to the best advantage. The three most important rules to observe in hand-feeding are: First, cleanliness; second, regularity; and third, proper proportioned ration.

Skim Milk for the Calf.

The skim milk should be continued until the calf is six months old, if possible; also provide the calf with pea vine hay, or alfalfa hay after it is four weeks old.

The Utility Express Truck $550 Chassis Only f. o. b. Flint, Mich.

Fits any Standard Truck Body

No business can succeed unless its product is profitably sold. Most farms have a fine production department but no sales department. They grow crops and stock bought by buyers who set the price.

One of the chief reasons for this unprofitable situation is the average farmer's poor facilities for moving his crops or stock to the place where he can sell or ship to the best advantage. Because of the time and expense of horse delivery millions of dollars worth of produce spoils annually on American farms. The saving of this waste would, in many cases, change a losing farm to a money-maker.

This low-priced, high-grade, reliable truck was designed as a money-saver and money-maker for farmers and business houses needing fast low-cost haulage of heavy or bulky goods. It fits any standard type of ton truck body. Ask any Chevrolet dealer for price of the style of body you require.

RAPID PROGRESS IN THE AIR

Recent Strides Made in Aeronautics Have Been Almost Bewildering in Extent and Variety.

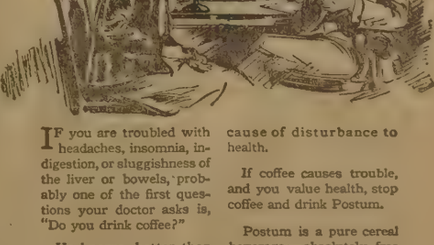
Recent progress in aeronautics has been almost bewildering in its extent and variety. The world's speed record now stands at nearly 245 miles per hour. Awe-inspiring endurance records and a nonstop coast-to-coast flight are likewise to the credit of our army air service.

Engines on full-power tests are now expected to run 250 hours continuously. Gliders remain aloft for many hours with nothing but air currents and the skill of their pilots to sustain them. Helicopters have risen vertically, hovered over a given point, made complete circuits in horizontal flight. Airplanes have been attached to dirigibles while both types of aircraft were in rapid flight. Metal is displacing wood in the

How Women Mail Letters.

Femininity has its own way of posting a simple, everyday letter, according to one keen observer. For instance, out of 30 women who were watched at a street letter box in the residential section of a large city, 21 withdrew the letter before quite letting go of it, to scan both sides of the envelope, to be certain the letter was securely sealed, properly addressed, stamped and to make sure nobody could look through the envelope to read the contents.

Why the Doctor asks: "Do you drink coffee?"



IF you are troubled with headaches, insomnia, indigestion, or sluggishness of the liver or bowels, probably one of the first questions your doctor asks is, "Do you drink coffee?"

He knows, better than anyone else, that the drug, caffeine, present in coffee, tends to irritate the nervous system and is a frequent cause of disturbance to health.

If coffee causes trouble, and you value health, stop coffee and drink Postum.

Postum is a pure cereal beverage—absolutely free from caffeine or any other drug. It has a delicious flavor, that many people prefer to coffee.

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer the flavor brought out by boiling fully 20 minutes. The cost of either form is about one-half cent a cup.

RAPID GROWTH HAS COME TO BAPTISTS

RESULTS IN SOUTH NOTED

Home and State Missions, Schools, Orphanages, Hospitals and Relief Report Marked Advances Under Forward Movement.

DR. B. D. GRAY,
ern Baptist Convention
Secretary Home Mission Board South.

Suggesting the growth which the Baptist 75 Million Campaign has brought to the general work of Southern Baptists, it is reported by the general headquarters of the movement that during the four years that have intervened since the Campaign was inaugurated in 1919, the denomination has gained 57 district associations, 862 active ministers, 3,068 local churches, 3,287 Sunday schools with 46[illegible] pupils, 3,888 Young People's Unions, with 233,917 members, and 7,014 Women's Missionary Union organizations and baptized 762,880 persons. At the same time the churches have given $28,776,937 more to missions, education and benevolences than they did during the corresponding period prior to the Campaign and have increased their investment in local church property by $45,[illegible]15.

The larger resources made possible for missions and benevolences through the efforts of the Campaign have been responsible for great advances in every team of denominational work, both at home and abroad.

Complete Church Building Fund

Among the outstanding achievements of the Home Mission Board, operating throughout the territory of the Southern Baptist Convention, are noted the completion of its million dollar church building loan fund, the baptism of 173,602 persons, reception into the churches of 277,963 persons, enlistment of 11,772 young people in the dedication of their lives to some definite form of Christian service, building or improvement of 1,873 church houses, and organization of 935 Baptist churches and 2,898 new Sunday schools.

Practically twice the state mission results have been accomplished in many of the states since the Campaign began as were had for any corresponding period of time prior to that movement.

Southern Baptists own 118 Baptist schools, colleges and seminaries, where nearly 40,000 young people are studying to fit themselves for larger usefulness. The number of students has been greatly increased through the Campaign making possible the larger equipment of the schools, and the investment which that movement has made possible in the schools is equal to about 45 per cent of their total value at the time the Campaign was inaugurated.

4,000 Orphans Cared For

Nearly 4,000 orphan boys and girls are cared for in the 19 Baptist orphanages of the South. Two new orphanages have been provided by the Campaign and practically all of the older ones have been given better equipment by this movement. The equipment is not large enough yet, as 2,000 boys and girls had to be turned away last year because the institutions had no more room.

When the Campaign was launched Southern Baptists had only 13 hospitals. Today that number has been increased to 21. Last year over 47,600 patients were treated in these hospitals, a large number of these being charity patients who could not have had an opportunity to get well except through some such assistance.

The Relief and Annuity Board, serving aged ministers, is now aiding more than 925 beneficiaries and has expended in direct relief since the Campaign began the sum of $414,892.46.

It will require $31,000,000 additional cash to complete the Campaign by the end of the period in 1924, and every effort is being made to enlist all Southern Baptists in having a share in this task.

BAD NAME

The new road just built by the county to the approach at Knight's Ferry is getting a bad name among the people. Some who have been over it say it is a veritable death trap.

It seems that the desent to the river is so precipitous that it is practically impossible to hold a car and keep it from skidding right on in to the river, especially is this true if the road happens to be wet.

We learn that a recent party attempting to negotiate that road was forced to turn their car sideways and let it turn over to escape a plunge into the river.

This is an evidence of extremely poor engineering and goes to show the absolute importance of having an experienced road man at the head of our road building projects.

The people are demanding good roads out of this gasoline tax and the commissioners wisely put forth a satisfactory plan to insure them, but if this is a sample of the service, they better look into the matter again. Give the farmers good, safe gravel roads and all will be forgiven.

BAPTIST REVIVAL

The series of services that are being conducted at the Baptist church this week, under the leadership of Dr. Sledge, of Macon, Ga., are growing in interest as the days pass by.

Last Sunday both the regular services were held with a full audience crowd, the large auditorium not being able to accommodate the people. It is estimated that 900 people, at least, were present at each of these services.

The 3:30 meeting for men and boys was also largely atended and the Doctor made a wonderful appeal to this large body of males. He is a forceful thinker and speaker and he truly exemplifies his name, for he is a hard hitter.

Several additions have been made to the church already and the indications seem to point to an ever increasing interest as the meeting progresses.

Services every day at 3:30 and 7:30 p. m. and everybody is urged to come out. At the 7:30 hour, if you want to get a seat, you better show up by 7:00 o'clock. If you don't you may have to stand up.

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUME 3 | CLANTON, ALABAMA, OCTOBER, 25, 1923. | NUMBER 7

STORE DESTROYED BY FIRE TUESDAY MORNING

The large Department Store, Known as the "Leader" and Owned by M. Lande, a Total Loss.

At 2:25 Tuesday morning the fire alarm was given and many citizens of Clanton rolled out from between the blankets and rushed out into the frosty air to investigate and to render such aid as was possible to whatever unfortunate person had fallen a victim to the fire fiend.

Volumes of black smoke, now and then pierced by loud tongues of flame were surging upwards from a central portion of the business section.

When the excited throngs reached the scene the discovered that all of the upper story of the Wilson building, on the ground floor of which was located the "Leader," was on fire.

In a few minutes after the alarm was sounded the city hose trucks were on the scene and five streams of water were playing on the flaming mass. For quite a while it looked like the fire would escape from the heavy brick walls of the building and devastate the entire block, but by hard and consistent work and good management the fire fighters won out and no other damage of importance was sustained.

We have not been able to obtain the real figures on the loss yet as the insurance adjusters have not completed their work at this writing.

The high class stock of merchandise carried by Mr. Lande must have been worth close to $40,000 and its said that he carried considerably less than half that amount of insurance. Mr. Lande has made many friends since he has been in Clanton and if words of sympathy could reimburse him he would be all right. It is to be hoped that he will arrange to stay on with us and we hope his business will, Phoenix like, rise from the ashes with renewed vitality.

We understand that Mr. P. D. Wilson, who owned the building, is only partially taken care of by insurance and is also a heavy loser. The walls of the building, having been thick and built with good brick, may stand intact, but all of the interior finish was of wood and is a complete loss.

This is the most serious visit we have had from the fire demon in sometime and should remind all of us to be always careful in taking fire risks.

The origin of the blaze is unknown. We have heard several possible conjectures, but no one, of course knows the cause.

MARVUS GROOMS DEAD.

One last Tuesday the grim messenger called at the home of Mr. O. D. Grooms, near Isabella, and carried away the 18 year old son of that happy home.

The remains were buried the following day at the Isabella Methodist church cemetery. Dr. S. J. Ezell, of Clanton preached the funeral at 2:00 p. m.

Mrs. Ed Edwards left the latter part of last week for Gastonia, N. C., where she expects to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Garner. Mr. Garner will be recalled as a splendid jeweler who lived in Clanton several years ago.

THE BAPTIST REVIVAL

On last Friday night the series of meetings that had been in progress at the Baptist church for 10 days came to a close, so far as the visiting preacher and singer was concerned, as they were called home and had to leave on Saturday.

Dr. Sledge, of Macon, Ga., who did the preaching up to that time, completed, with his sermon that night, one of the most wonderful and spiritual series of sermons we ever had the opportunity of listening to. He is a deep thinker, an attractive speaker and knows and uses his Bible from start to finish. The great work he did in Clanton will live and bear frut for years after his intensive soul has gone to bask in the joyous radiance of heaven, and we doubt not, that many of the great galaxy of stars that must shine in his crown over there will have been won here in his earnest work for the Master.

Rev. Jordan, of Royston, Ga., who had charge of the song service is a faithful and consecrated worker and did all in his power to win souls over to the better way. Both of these Christian gentelmen made many warm friends during their stay here and they will long be pleasantly remembered by our good people.

On Friday night the congregation decided by vote to have services right on until Sunday night, so Dr. Ezell, our able and hard working pastor, had to shoulder the load and go forward alone. At the Saturday night service a very large crowd was in attendance, and, as is his custom, Dr. Ezell preached them a sermon well worthy of the time, place and occasion. Sunday at 11 o'clock he filled his regular appointment and preached to an overflowing crowd. On Sunday night, at 7:30 the baptismal services came and some 59 of those awating the ordinance were baptised by the pastor.

The tangible results of the meeting was an addition to the church of 90 members, 69 by baptism and 21 by letter. The spiritual results to the church and to the community no man can estimate. It can but mark a great step forward in the grand march of better things for our town and community.

It is superflous to add that in so far as the financial demands of the meeting were concerned, the good people of the community took care of all that amply and gloriously. They always do.

A LOVELY BUNGALOW

One of the neatest new bungalow homes that has been erected around Clanton in a long time is one just now nearing completon out on the Mapleville road just out of the city limits.

It belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Joe Gra and is not only a beauty but is complete in every detail, inside and out. It is an added beauty to that splendid vicinity.

PLANTING GRAIN

The farmer who puts in plenty of fall grain right now is the one that will not have to pay $2.00 per bushel for corn next spring to feed on.

Arrange now to meet the conditions that are certain to prevail next year. The corn crop is short and many farmers will be forced to buy feed on which to make their next crop, then why not prepare to meet this condition in time? Plant plenty of fall grain.

We solicit your patronage and will guarantee to give you good service to a wide field of local buyers. At the home of her father, Mr. M. F. Wagoner, of Fairview, Mrs. Jackson Culver, who was 27 years of age. Death came to her as a relief from a long tedious battle with tuberculosis.

Her remains were laid to rest at the Mt. Nebo cemetery, where a large and sorrowing crowd of relatives and friends assembled to take this final farewell.

Rev. Marion Mims, of Verbena, was in charge of the services.

Sickness at most times is a great hardship and inconvenience, but when a serious charge in court is pending against a fellow it steps in most opportunely occasionally. The Birmingham courts are furnishing an illustration of this fact right now.

YOUNG MAN DIES

Mr. J. T. Williams, the 20-year-old son of Mr. R. A. Williams of Route 7, died last week at his home in Lakeland, Fla. The remains were brought here last Saturday and were carried back to his boyhood home and on the following day were given their last earthly resting place in the cemetery at Mt. Nebo Methodist church.

He was a real Chilton county boy but had cast his lot in the "Land of Flowers" and made good, as he had already become manager of a thriving ... interest at Lakeland. He ... relatives in this section as well as a large circle of friends who are sorely grieved by his untimely passing away.

Rev. V. S. Jones, of Mapelsville, officiated at the grave, where a large audience had assembled to bid a final earthly good bye to their young friend.

We are reproducing below a clipping from the Lakeland Star-Telegram which speaks for itself as to Mr. Williams' standing in that city:

It was with the deepest regret that the many friends of Jesse T. Williams, learned of his death which occurred yesterday morning at 8:10 o'clock at the Morrell Memorial Hospital.

The deceased had made Lakeland his home for the past two years during which time he won many friends, who are deeply grieved over his death. He was employed several months by M. L. Henley Mercantile Company, later he was connected with the United Market. He is survived by his father R. V. Williams, two sisters, Mrs. ... of Roper and Mrs. F. B. ... and three brothers, Willie B. Williams, M. F. Williams and C. L. Williams all of Clanton, Alabama. The remains were shipped yesterday at noon to Clanton, Alabama where the ... held and interment will be made at Mount Nebo cemetery.

MR. W. J. COX SERIOUSLY HURT

Last Friday ... was an explosion at the works of the National Cast Iron Pipe works, at Tarrant City, that came very near taking a large death toll among the employees.

Mr. W. J. Cox, son of Rev. W. S. Cox and brother to Mr. C. B. Cox, of our county, was among the employees there who escaped death by a margin so narrow that they can hardly realize that they are still living.

Mr. Cox suffered a complete smashing of his jaw bone, serious crushing of one thigh and some painful burns.

He was rushed to the Norwood Infirmary and given all of the surgical aid possible immediately. His father and mother, who returned from visiting him Monday, say that the doctors are hopeful for his final recovery, but that it will be a tedious process.

Mr. Cox was one of the most efficient and valuable men the company had and they are leaving nothing undone in an effort to save his life and restore him to a normal state of health. It is our hope that their efforts may meet with perfect success.

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages, judgements, or other liens affecting the title, which an abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an abstract of title, be furnished. HEALTH FOR WORKING WOMEN

Let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Help You to Become Well.

Thousands of girls have to work in homes, offices, stores, mills or factories who are physically unfit for work, with often an aged or invalid father or mother dependent upon them for support. Standing all day week in and week out, or sitting in cramped positions a girl often contracts some deranged condition of her organic system which calls a halt to her progress and demands restoration to health before she can be of use to herself or anyone else.

For these distressing weaknesses and derangements these girls have found health to do their work in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"Like many girls, I had troubles every month," says Carolyne Mangels, "and they interfered with my work as I could never be sure of my time. My mother often suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but I never did until lately. I have had very good results, and am now a private secretary and do my work without missing a day. I recommend your medicine to every girl who speaks of having troubles like I have had."—CAROLYNE MANGELS, 407 14th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Office Worker Helped

Milwaukee, Wis.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine for three and a half years, and they have improved my health wonderfully. My mother also has taken the Vegetable Compound and we recommend it to our friends. I am working in an office now and can always do my work as I do not have the troubles I had at first. I read of your Vegetable Compound in the newspaper and you may use my letter in that way if you wish to do so."—ELEANOR SHERLAR, 687 36th St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Pains and Headache

Webster, Mass.—"I was all run-down, had a bad complexion, and suffered with pains and backache, and was dizzy at times and felt weak. I worked in a mill and my girl chum told me about your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am feeling much better since taking it."—MARY PLAZA, 13 West Street, Webster, Mass.

BOARDING HOUSE FOR PETS

Institution for Care of Dogs and Cats Planned by Humane Society in Kansas City.

Plans for establishing a boarding house for pet animals, principally dogs and cats, were outlined recently by officials of the Wyandotte County Humane society. The plans will be submitted to the board of directors by Miss Sarah Jacobs, president.

The dog and cat boarding house would be self-sustaining. Miss Jacobs said that the plan contemplated would require the construction of suitable sheds, pens, a run or playground for dogs and a modern system for disinfectant to guard against disease.

"I have had more than 100 calls this summer," Miss Jacobs said, "from responsible persons who desired to pay for a temporary home for their pets while away on vacations.

"It appears comical to establish a boarding house for dogs and cats, but the proposal has a serious side. Many animals are valuable, and dogs roaming the streets while owners are away on vacations often become rabid."

Miss Jacobs said provisions would be made to give lodging to horses and cows if the demand was great enough. The boarding house would be under supervision of a veterinary surgeon.—Detroit News.

Telegraph Wires in Uganda.

Telegraphs in Uganda are not always reliable, as the natives covet and often cut down the copper wire for making into bracelets and necklaces.

All Angora Cats Alike.

It was a valuable Angora cat, but its owner was governed as much by humane instincts as appreciation of its value when she took it to a boarding place when preparing to start on a European trip. Though friends offered to take care of it she felt that her pet would have even better care in a regular cat home. It was therefore with considerable surprise and indignation, a day or so after she placed it in the boarding place, that she ran across her cat roaming the streets.

Swiftly she picked it up and descended on the boarding house. For five minutes she gave vent to her wrath. When he got a chance the proprietor spoke.

"Calm yourself, madame," said he. "Your cat is here. The one you hold in your arms is the twin of yours and it belongs to Mrs. Blank." To prove his point he produced the other.—New York Sun and Globe.

The Superman.

Mr. Flubdub, after trying to read the paper while his wife gabbled, laid it down.

"I see a registration of motorists visiting the national parks shows there is an average of 3.45 persons per car."

"What about it?" snapped his better half.

"Nothing; I was just thinking," he insisted.

"Well, what were you thinking?"

"Nothing much, my dear. I guess I am the .45 person per car."

Even if love were not blind, he is sometimes absent-minded that he might as well be.

Do you take orders from a Coffee Pot?

IT must be humiliating for thousands of people to confess that they lack the will-power to stop coffee.

They know from experience that it results in irritated nerves; keeps them awake nights; makes them nervous. Yet they don't seem to be able to say "No."

If you find that coffee harms you, change to the pure cereal beverage, Postum. You'll find it delicious and satisfying. And it is absolutely free from caffeine or any other harmful drug, so you can drink Postum at any meal, and as much as you want.

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer the flavor brought out by boiling fully 20 minutes. The cost of either form is about one-half cent a cup.

DAIRY FACTS

Clean, Sweet Milk Aim of Wisconsin Dairymen

Clean, sweet milk is the first essential to cheese factory success, declares J. L. Sammis of the dairy department of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture.

Here are his ten commandments for cheese makers, dairy farmers, and cow testers:

1. Modern methods of farm cleanliness and factory milk inspection insure success.

2. Milk cans, pails, strainers, and milking machines should be cleaned and scalded thoroughly every time used. Neglect causes sure trouble.

3. Old, battered, open-seamed, or rusty utensils cannot be properly cleaned, and should be repaired if possible, or replaced with new.

4. Never carry a milk can into the barn. In the morning, place the cans on the wagon, outside the barn, with the strainer on top, ready to start for the factory as soon as the milk is drawn and strained.

5. Night milk must be cooled quickly on the farm. Put the milk can into the cold water tank, so that each pail of milk will begin to cool as soon as it is strained into the can. Stir the milk in the can frequently. Pump fresh, cold water into the tank, before leaving for the night. Cool the milk to the temperature of cold well water in one hour.

6. Feed silage and dusty seeds after milking. Change a cow's feed gradually.

7. Keep cows, barn, yard, utensils, and the milker's hands clean.

8. Use horse sense about clean milk, even if you drive no horse.

9. The cheese makers at the factories can inspect every can of milk daily with the modern incubator and methylene blue test, and show by the results the sanitary condition and cleanliness of every patron's milk. See that your factory has this test in daily use.

10. Cow testing association members are leaders. Their influence and the tester's should start the "cleaner milk" campaign in every community.

Working Safeguards to Keep Out Tuberculosis

How to select cows or a bull with a minimum of risk in obtaining animals infected with tuberculosis is one of the most important questions the beginning dairyman and many small dairies have to answer. There is no infallible rule, but there are three good working safeguards that are practical. They are:

1. So far as possible buy only from herds that are accredited by the United States Department of Agriculture as being free from tuberculosis, and buy only from persons with a reputation for square dealing.

2. Insist on cattle being bought subject to retest for tuberculosis 60 days after they are delivered to you.

3. Keep all recently purchased animals separate from your herd until you have a favorable report on the retest.

It Is Most Important to Grade Milk Itself

While the practice of scoring barns and the conditions under which milk is produced, has brought about remarkable improvement in the milk offered for consumption, it is more important to grade the milk itself according to reports made at the general experiment station. In the control of milk emphasis should be placed on the quality of the milk itself as shown by the bacterial count, flavor, butterfat content and dirt. Exercising control over the quality of the milk automatically controls the conditions under which it is produced. Much evidence is available to show that contamination of milk from the barn and cow is relatively unimportant as compared with the possibilities of the large numbers of bacteria getting into the milk from utensils.

Comparison of Roughages for Production of Milk

If you are in doubt about comparative values of different kinds of dairy roughage, write to the Iowa State college at Ames and get the bulletin, "A Comparison of Roughages for Milk Production." Such facts as these are told: "If the value of dry matter in silage is worth 66 cents per 100 pounds, that in corn fodder is worth 32½ cents for feeding to producing cows. With alfalfa hay worth $15 a ton, timothy hay is worth in comparison only 86 cents per ton for producing cows. The use of corn fodder instead of silage reduces milk production 6 per cent and fat production 3 per cent."

Prevent Entrance of Dirt.

The best system is to prevent, so far as possible, the entrance of dirt into milk. This can be done best by having clean cows in clean stables, milked with clean hands, into clean, small-top pails.

Milk Essential for Calf.

It is very necessary for a young calf to get its mother's milk for the first two or three days. This milk possesses properties which stimulate the calf's stomach and starts him off on his life's journey.

GOOD HIGHWAYS

Large Problem Faced Is Durability of Highways

In my travels over the United States I have been most favorably impressed by the great strides in highway improvements made in many states, writes L. G. Fairbank in an exchange.

One gratifying feature is the determination of national, state and county authorities to have real highways, not merely makeshifts. They have profited by experience and realise that to meet the transportation conditions the highways must be constructed accordingly.

In the old days of transportation on steam roads we had the narrow gauge lines with small engines and cars. Heavier loads meant economy in transportation and naturally heavier loads meant heavier cars and locomotives. To meet this situation, however, improvements had to be made in roadbeds and a different type of steel rails had to be provided. This situation exists today in our transportation over the state and national highways. We must have a different program of road construction and that is just what is going on virtually everywhere.

Often it is thought that heavy vehicles, carrying heavy loads, are responsible for the deplorable condition of some highways. We have seen photographic and other proof of the wrecking of roads. We have seen the calamitous condition of pavements smashed by pressure of some kind. What is the answer?

In the fall we find some roads as models of durability. In the spring they are wrecks. Meanwhile heavy trucks had been driven over them. Could there be a superficially plainer case of cause and effect? It was obvious that to save the roads the trucks and the loads must be made lighter.

On some stretches of the road where the collapse of the pavements is most discouraging, nothing goes wrong. There the trucks do not crush the concrete or buckle the brick pavements. The loads are precisely the same that are hauled over other stretches of the road. The same wheels of the same vehicles roll over sections that stand up under the test that roll over the strips that gave way. What, then, is responsible?

Is it the weight of the loads or is it the manner in which the road was constructed? Is it the way the builders failed to adapt their work to the conditions they had to deal with? Is it that soil and drainage, materials and construction methods did not get proper attention?

When one road along a sandy ridge, with good, natural drainage, comes through a hard winter scarcely the worse for wear and another road in the same district and the same climate, carrying the same traffic, with the same truck loads, but with spots in which the subsoil is wet and there is no natural drainage, is found in a state of collapse after the frost comes out of the ground, what is the logical conclusion? Is it lighter loads or closer attention to drainage and other important features entering into the construction of our highways?

Isn't the remedy to be sought in the more scientific adjustments of the highways to the natural changes in the direction of larger vehicle units and more economical transportation on the public roads? The question is vital to the solution of the whole problem of country highways, their construction and maintenance. It is of immense importance to all producers and consumers. It is a basic transportation problem for America's millions of people who want to do the sensible thing and the right thing by all interested.

The trend is strongly along this line and that is why highway construction in 1923 is far in advance of such work done in years gone by.

When Is a Bad Highway a Good One Is Question

When is a bad road a good road? And when is a good road a bad road? Questions seemingly foolish, that are asked by H. R. Leonard, an authority on automobiles, in all seriousness, and then answered by him with considerable logic.

"Many motorists," he says, "think of a road with a macadam, concrete or asphalt surface as 'good,' without considering any other feature of travel over it. A road should not be judged by its surface alone, however. Some of the so-called bad roads with their cleaner air and picturesque scenery loom up as vastly more desirable for enjoyable motoring than the over-traveled highways that parallel them. In these modern times when the motorist rides on long flexible springs and his car is equipped with efficient devices for checking spring recoil, he can essay grpay trails and country turnpikes with complete confidence. If his automobile is properly equipped he will ride in comfort at most any pace he chooses."

Trying New Road Surface.

A new kind of road surface is being experimented with in Manchester, England. Concrete blocks, six inches square and three inches deep, with a top plate of cast iron a quarter of an inch in width, are being laid.

Question as to Subway.

Why spend $30,000 a mile to build good roads that lead 35 automobile riders to death at railroad crossings in one day? Why not have the roads cross either over or under the railroad tracks?

How a Single Industry Spreads Prosperity

A most significant fact about an industry is the large number of people who benefit from it.

Take the cement industry, as an example:

The mills used 9,000,000 tons of coal last year. This meant 9,000 coal miners steadily employed—their families, numbering not less than 25,000, maintained—and along with them tradesmen and other people enough to supply the needs of a town of over 50,000.

That is, of course, saying nothing of the business created for coal operators and transportation lines.

Sacks are not so large an item in the cement industry as coal, yet 50,000,000 new sacks, representing 50,000 bales of cotton, had to be bought last year for replacements alone. Back of this were cotton planters, plantation workers, mill owners, mill operatives and so on—thousands altogether.

And consider these other requirements of the industry last year:

3,700,000 barrels of fuel oil
3,400,000,000 cubic feet of gas
15,000,000 pounds of explosives
32,000,000 pounds of greases and oils
1,700,000 linear feet of belting
4,500,000 firebrick for relining kilns
7,000,000 pounds of paper for bags
600,000 tons of gypsum

In addition the industry bought quantities of heavy grinding and burning machinery, locomotives, cars, rails, electrical and other necessary equipment.

In this way a single industry spreads prosperity to many others.

POPULARITY OF MULE FOR FARM WORK IS RAPIDLY INCREASING

Mule Is Able to Perform Sterling Service on Farm.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The ability of the mule to endure hardship and perform sterling service under adverse conditions has established him as a real asset in American agriculture, says the United States Department of Agriculture, and his importance and popularity as a work animal is attested by his rapidly increasing use. In 1910, the number of mules on farms and ranches was 4,209,769. The number on January 1, 1920, was 5,432,391, an increase during the decade of nearly 30 per cent. Nearly three-fifths of all the mules in use in the United States are found in the nine Cotton Belt States. These states, Texas, Georgia, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Louisiana, had a total of 3,172,797, mules in 1920 as compared with 2,855,258 horses. Texas and Oklahoma were the only Cotton Belt states having more horses than mules.

Useful for Utility Purposes.

While the mule is essentially a draft animal, it is used widely for utility purposes, especially in the South. Mules vary in height from 12 hands to 17½ hands and in weight from 600 pounds to 1,600 pounds. They are divided into five general market classes: Draft, farm, sugar, cotton, and mining. Each of these classes again is graded according to conformation, soundness, quality, condition, and action, and classified as choice, good, medium, common, or inferior.

Form and Appearance.

The general form and appearance of the mule should resemble closely that of a horse, and in judging mules the same general points of perfection are to be looked for. The nearer the mule approaches the ideal desired in a draft horse the more valuable he is from a market standpoint, department specialists state. The form of the mule should be compact, with a deep body, broad chest, full flanks, short back, and well-sprung ribs, similar to the pair shown in the illustration. The loins should be broad, short, and thickly muscled; the croup long and level; the hips long, level, and muscular; the thighs thick, long, and well muscled; and the hind legs well set, with broad, clean-cut hocks and flat, dense bone. The mule should stand on good feet that are well shaped. While style and action may not be so important in a mule as they are in the lighter breeds of horses, these qualities add materially to its value. A smart, alert mule with a long, free stride at the walk and a snappy, balanced trot is highly desired.

Inspection of Milk Is Discussed in Bulletin

Work Includes More Than Detection of Adulteration.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"The work of milk inspection has broadened in recent years and now includes more than the detection of adulteration, though many people in their ordinary use of language do not recognize this fact, and continue to speak of 'pure milk' as milk that is not watered and contains no preservative," say Ernest Kelly and C. S. Leete, joint authors of Department Circular 276, Inspection of Milk Supplies, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. "The bacterial content of the milk must always be taken into consideration when designating milk as pure. The chemical, bacteriological and sanitary aspects should not be confused. Each is essential in studying the purity of milk."

Circular 276 treats of inspection in the city as well as on the farm. It gives the qualifications for milk inspectors and discusses milk ordinances. The score-card system of inspection of dairy farms and milk plants is described, and samples of score cards for each are reprinted. The circular also takes up laboratory control, giving a list of equipment and the procedure for analyzing samples of milk.

"Milk inspection has reached the point in its development where three distinct features are now practically essential," says the circular. These features are: Dairy inspection, dairy instruction, and laboratory control." . . . "As recontamination after pasteurization may prove serious, the milk-control officials should make frequent and methodical examination of apparatus, bottles and cans with which the milk comes in contact after pasteurization. Laboratory control of this phase of the work is essential. Those who handle milk or milk containers on farms where milk is sold for use in its raw state or in pasteurizing plants should be subject to frequent medical inspection." The circular may be obtained, while the supply lasts, upon application to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Grease or Lard Aids to Prevent Tools Rusting

No matter if tools are kept out of the wet, even the dampness of the air will cause them to rust. A paste made of tallow or lard and graphite, with a little camphor gum will prevent rust when applied and afterwards rubbed dry. Mix two parts grease to one of graphite. Add about one-fourth as much camphor gum as there is of the graphite. Get the tools quite clean and dry, apply the paste and allow it to remain on all metal parts for 24 hours or longer, then rub dry. Tools treated in this way will not rust for several months, though exposed to damp air. Treat in this way every two or three months, not only tools, but any steel or iron surface.

Disease of Sweet Corn Is Discovered in Ohio

A disease of sweet corn, which causes stunted growth followed by wilting and death of affected plants, has been reported to the Ohio experiment station by several growers.

Station pathologists state that in this affection, known as Stewart's disease, the interiors of the stems if cut just above the ground are found to be discolored and the sap to be thick and sticky, due to the presence of the bacteria which cause the disease.

The disease is carried on the seed and in the remains of diseased plants in the soil or in manure.

To prevent the spread of the disease affected plants are pulled up and burned and corn is not grown on the ground for at least four years. Though field corn is not noticeably affected it is not advisable to grow it upon land where diseased sweet corn has been grown, as it may serve to keep the infection in the soil.

Best Depth for Plowing Will Vary With Seasons

Commenting on an article regarding deep versus shallow plowing which appeared in a recent issue of Seasonable Hints From the Dominion Experimental Farms, Ottawa, Canada, Prof. Alvin Kezer, chief agronomist, Colorado Agricultural college, said:

"The truth of the matter is that there is no one depth, shallow or deep, that is the best depth to plow. The best depth will vary with the time the plowing is done, the soil, crop to be grown, the length of the season where the crop is to be put in or where the plowing is done. I can illustrate this last point by quoting the Canadian experience again. They found that anything over the four-inch plowing in the Peace River country delays the wheat crop so that it is often attacked by frost, while the shallow plowing enables the harvest to get out of the way before frost. There is no one right depth, deep or shallow."

Mineral Mixture Helps Laying Hens or Chicks

A mixture of salt, lime, and bone meal added to soy-bean meal or other vegetable protein nearly doubled its value in the feed for laying hens or growing chicks, in recent tests at the Ohio experiment station.

These minerals, though making up only 4 per cent of the mash and costing less than 4 cents a year per hen, proved as necessary as any other part of the feed.

Grains and seeds are deficient in protein and minerals. These are supplied by the addition of meat scrap, skim milk or other animal supplement to the feed of grain and mash. Soybean meal, peanut meal, cottonseed meal, and the like supply protein but are deficient in minerals.

When the mineral mixture was added to soy-bean meal at the rate of four pounds per hundred its value was doubled, making it almost equal to meat scrap or milk for egg production and growth.

The station mineral mixture is made up of 60 parts of bone meal, 20 of limestone and 20 of common salt.

MERCHANT GIVES MORE EVIDENCE

W. F. Penny, prominent merchant of Hendersonville, N. C., and a leader in the civic and business affairs of his section, gives unstinted praise to Tanlac, which, he states, has restored his health and overcome troubles that had defied treatment for years:

"For many years," stated Mr. Penny, "I was a great sufferer from indigestion and stomach trouble. Ulceration set in and necessitated an operation. Utter lack of digestive power over a long period so weakened me that I was hardly able to attend to my business.

"Tanlac seemed to reach the seat of my troubles at once and now I have normal strength and activity in every way. Tanlac is undoubtedly the best stomach medicine to be had."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Take no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

The Test of True Love.

A bride who had bobbed her hair read a fashion item which thoroughly frightened her. Her husband was reading in the library and when she managed to reach him she was shaking visibly.

"Why, my dear," he asked, "what is the matter?"

"Freddie, do you love me since I bobbed my hair?"

"Of course."

"But this magazine," whimpered the bride, "says that bobbed hair is rapidly going out of fashion."

"It may not know. But what of it?"

"Freddie, will yo ulove me if I go out of style?"

A young man who had gone for a week's vacation overstayed his time.

On his return to the city a friend who knew he was none too flush of money said to him:

"Why did you remain away so much longer, Jim?"

"My friends kept me there," replied Jim.

"Your friends? Why, I didn't know you had any friends at the seaside," said his companion.

OHIO'S SANDSTONE QUARRIES

Vast Quantities of Whetstones and Grindstones Taken From Pit South of Lake Erie.

The world's largest sandstone quarries are located in Ohio, a few miles to the south of Lake Erie, in the vicinity of the towns of North Amherst and Berea. From these quarries come also vast quantities of our whetstones and grindstones, and there is very much that is of interest with respect to the industry.

One of the quarries has been mined to a depth of 185 feet in places and the distance around it is a mile and a half. Looking into this pit from one edge, one is reminded of the ruins of the Colosseum, for the walls are cut in shallow terraces, which are not unlike the seats of the open-air theater of the ancients.

In cutting a block of sandstone wedges are driven in sidewise at the base of the block, while steam drills bore holes from the top to meet the openings made by the wedges. A machine called a channeler then cuts the block away.

Plague Deadly in Java.

In Java, which has a population a third as big as ours, bubonic plague is so common that it kills half of the children before they are five years old. The Javanese take this as a matter of course, reports William Ferguson, globe trotter. He found the people of Java with the viewpoint that if the plague didn't kill half of the children the island shortly would be unable to sustain the inhabitants despite its fertility.

Nature is cynical in its harshness. She deals only in cause and effect, action and reaction, and the thing we call emotion is alien to her plans. Civilization is merely a banding together for mutual protection against harsh nature. Most of us have lost sight of this original purpose.

Entered in the Postoffice at Clanton, Alabama, as Second Class Mail Matter Under Act of Congress.

The Jay Walker in the down town districts of Clanton these days is just out o'luck.

"The fool and his money soon parts." The supposition is that the wise man doesn't have any.

Did you ever notice that there is always an urgent need to spend two dollars every time you get hold of one?

Calvin, the Silent, is still holding his tongue, but when Congerss meets in December he will have to talk or "bust."

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise." Crawl in a hole and stop it up when winter comes.

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." Then the people along the B & M highway must be in a dying condition by now.

The paper may be just a little bit "biggity" this week. We had a good chicken feed last Sunday and we are still feeling the effects of it.

There is always some compensation for the people of the South. We learn that the 'possum crop is the largest in years.

No, we have no winter clothes. Yes, we know exactly what we did with our last summer's wages, too. We eat 'em up just like we are doing now.

Don't ever criticise the fellow who is trying to do something for the community. The thing to do is to jump in and show him how to do it better.

Put it down in your memory now and don't forget it. The first frost for the fall of 1923 came on the morning of October 31st.

Congress is flirting with the 30's now. Maybe if the Agricultural Department will pull off their hat and apologize when they give out their next report.

If you don't like what we put in the paper, we invite you to take a shot at it and see if you can do any better. That's fair and square, now, put up or shut up.

It looks like the present generation will have to die out and a new crowd who have had no experience in bond issues, will have to be born before we get a state highway.

Hon. B. B. Comer has declined to enter the race for United States Senator. That leaves the issue, at present, between "Cotton Tom" and Col. Bankhead, of Jasper. Come on Tom.

Montgomery is bragging about her "efficient traffic cops' that are planted in the center of the streets at busy crossings. Pshaw! we have had them in Clanton so long we have done got used to them. They do the work, however.

After the terrible dust scourge came the rain. After the rain came Jack Frost. On the heels of Jack Frost came the coal man. When he gets through there is nothing left.

They say the wheat farmers are ruined because they can get only $1 for wheat. Argentina has 100,000,000 bushels surplus wheat to sell. Still meat stays up to war time prices. Something rotten here.

Gov. Walton sees the handwriting on the wall, but he says he will not resign but is going down fighting to the last. That is a good sentiment, but, like a great many other good things, it falls into bad hands sometimes.

The new highway triumviate is going to call some meetings in Montgomery and Birmingham to find out "what the people want." Ye gods and little fishes! The people want some real systematic highway construction that will enable the traffic of the state to move. These little segregated sections of road 100 miles apart don't mean a thing except to a few favored neighbors. The people want a connected system that comes from somewhere and goes somewhere.

GETTING OUR FEET ON THE GROUND

Ever since the terrible days of the war, with all of its abnormal effects on the world, everything and everybody has been up in the air, so to speak.

The enormous profits made by people in trade, as well as those who work with their hands, set up in our minds a mistaken and fictitious standard of values, and the days of normalcy are yet in the future and will continue to be until we recover from this wild orgery of greed and graft and return to a true realization of the value represented by the dollar of our daddies. We can not hope to have normal conditions until we, as a nation, forsake these inflated ideas and come back to our senses and sanity.

The farmer is about the only person we know of who has returned to anything like a normal condition, and he did not do so through choice, but because the greed of the capitalistic class still craved more and more of the products of his labor to feed the insatiable maw of their gambling machines of manufacture.

There is today untold millions of bushels of wheat in the world that can find no market. Our western farmers are loaded down with wheat that cost them $1.50 per bushel to make that they can hardly dispose of at 80c per bushel. Still, the price of the finished product is almost as high as the war time figures. We bought flour almost as cheaply made from $2.50 wheat as we do now when it is made from the 80 cent article.

Conditions like that tell the whole story. Somebody along the line is robbing the wheat farmers at one end of the game and the consumer at the other. A gigantic double robbery is in progress and no one seems able to stop it.

Such thieving methods were made possible during the chaotic war period and the grafters who grew fat then learned the trick so thoroughly that it seems impossible to regulate business in any way that will eliminate this robber band and get the feet of business back on the solid foundation of fair dealing and honest policies.

Labor has notrecovered d from the abnormal inflation of the war either. We see where brick masons in New York and Chicago are demanding, and in many instances receiving $20 for an 8 hour day laying brick. Plasterers are demanding $36 per day in these cities. Common labor wants $10 per day and so on.

Now, there can be but one inevitable result of these prices and that is already dawning. People who would build have quit. These prices are prohibitive. Already the effect of these outrageous prices is being felt all over the country. Ask the saw mill man here at home and he will tell you the demand for lumber has almost ceased and he is going to be forced to close down if the market does not open up. The market can not and will not open up while such abnormal cost is added on to building. The working class are killing their own goose and before they realize what they are doing, hunger will be driving them back to work and the other fellow will be naming the wages. They are gambling away the hold they have had on the situation. They are going to be compelled to get their feet back on the ground.

Almost every industry in this country is digging its own grave, driven by the craze and greed engendered by the spirit of grafting that spread abroad over the land while the war clouds brooded over us.

Even God Himself was practictlly eliminated from the world during the war, in so far as the mind of man was concerned. Atheism, agnosticism and infidelity were taught to our soldier boys by the officers, ignorantly contending that the fear, love and grace of God would make cowards of them.

Today the effect of this fearful mistake is apparent all over the land. There is more sceptisism among the masses than at any other period since civilization spread over the world and God was recoginzed as Ruler over all.

We must get our feet back on the ground. A solid foundation is essential to the best success and progress of every phase of existence in the world. We cannot ride this bubble forever. It will burst some day and our business structure will tumble down in ruins around us.

The part of wisdom is to add just values honestly and eliminate the get-rich-quick idea from our minds. Let us get our feet back on the ground.

THE HIGHWAY COMMISSION

The recent legislature took a very long stride in the right direction when they reduced the State Highway Commission from the cumbersome body that it was down to three men.

The record of this former Board of Commissioners has been absolutely unsatisfactory and disappointing to the voters of Alabama in practically every road project they have let. Apparently they have been governed by no constructive program, nor influenced by any well defined plan of real service during their entire tenure of office.

Probably there was not a voter supporting the Road Bond issue in the state who did not suppose at the time he cast his ballot that the first money spent would be devoted to building long trunk highways through the state, north and south and east and west that would furnish a connected system of good roads. Instead of that the projects seem to have been let out like political patronage or on personal and local grounds.

About half of the $25,000,000 has been spent in building little widely separated systems of roads that have no special destination further than possibly to couple two favored communities together. This method of road building has benefited comparatively few citizens and has been a sad disappointment to the masses at large.

The plan, so far, has been a great shock to the air castles built by the spell binders who toured the state before the election.

To the great majority the system has assumed the proportions of almost a graft and it will be many years before the people of Alabama will again burden themselves with another bonded debt no matter what the issue.

The policy has been, so far as the general public can see, utterly aimless and without absolutely any excuse for its erratic results.

The State of Alabama needs especially a north and south good road for traffic and tourists travel and we are loosing thousands of dollars every year from tourists alone, because they are forced to detour our state on account of the bad roads.

OUR VACATION

Our summer vacation was rather late in coming but it unexpectedly arrived last Sunday and for about 9 hours we rested from our labors, troubles and anxieties and resigned ourselves to the joys of a real glorious vacation.

We had with us the good little lady that has tried for about 27 years to keep us on the right track and two of the kids. It required a good deal of gall to head this little army in unexpectedly on our good friends down there, but our old time "buddy," Dave Norris and his most estimable wife, threw the doors wide open and put a lot of extra pots on the stove and not only fed us all sumptuously, but their welcome was so genuine and true that the saddest hour we have had lately came when we had to bid them good-by. For the very purest brand of old time Southern hospitality commend us to Dave and his excellent wife.

We met a lot more of our good old time friends who made our heart swell with gratitude by their hearty welcome. Some of God's noblemen live at Mt. Creek.

One of the especially pleasant features of vacation was that we fell in with Senator Sam Adams on the train as we went down and found that he was headed for Mt. Creek likewise and had an appointment to preach to the old veterans at the Soldiers' Home at 11 o'clock. We availed ourselves of the pleasant privilege of going out to hear him. About all of the old heroes who were able to do so, were out to hear him, as well as a large number of citizens from the neighborhood. They were not disappointed, for Rev. S. M. gave us a sermon worth while.

In the afternoon at 2:30, Rev. Adams preached at the Baptist church at Mt. Creek to a good crowd. His subject was "Reconciliation." Here was where he told the story of the cross indeed. Bro. Adams not only made the Star Senator in the recent legislative assembly, but he is one of the safest and ablest preachers in Alabama. The people down there asked him to give them another appointment and he is scheduled there for the third Sunday in November.

Well, our vacation is over and what it lacked in duration was well made up in pleasure. The good people of Mt. Creek are all enshrined in our heart by the memory of other days and there is no place where we can feel so welcome and so much at home as we do among them.

It looks like Alabama and Oklahoma need a new definition of the powers belonging to the executive and the judicial branches of the government. Evidently somebody is usurping the perogatives belonging to somebody else. "O, Tempora, O Mores."

Ex-governor B. B. Comer is looming up as a probable contestant against Hon. J. Thos. Heflin for his seat in the U. S. Senate. With the father in the race for senator and the son, Donald Comer, out after the gubernatorial chair, the Comer family promises to get in the limelight proper.

It is admitted by all people that a protective tariff is intended to protect the manufacturers from competition with cheap labor products from abroad. Then how, in the name of Andrew Jackson, can you argue that a tariff on sugar does not inflate the price. Open the [illegible] quick sugar will go [illegible] or 5c per pound.

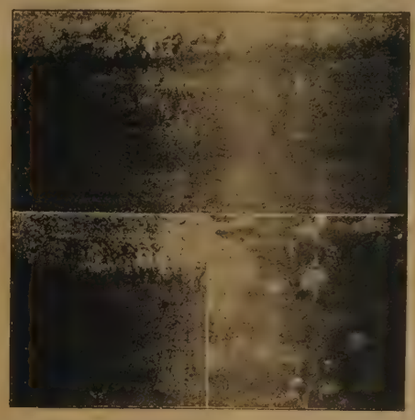
Make South's Idle Lands "Blossom Like The Rose"



Some of the crops produced on Southern cut-over lands. Top, field of sugar cane; below, high grade cattle and Satsuma Oranges.

One of the principal objects of the Forestry Reclamation and Home-Making Conference to be held in New Orleans, November 19-22 is to devise ways and means for putting to some useful purpose the vast areas of cut-over, swamp and overflowed lands in the South. The conference will be held under auspices of the Southern Pine Association, Mississippi and Florida Development Boards and New Orleans Association of Commerce, and the people of every southern state and community are considered to be vitally interested in this movement.

Several million acres of arid land in the West have been made to "blossom like the rose" by reclamation through irrigation projects financed and constructed by the federal government. The South now is asking that she be allowed to share in this federal assistance so that those portions of her idle lands suitable for agriculture also may be made to "blossom like the rose."

Many prosperous localities in the South which have been built up on cut-over lands furnish convincing proof that large portions of the cut over and "wet" tracts in the South can be made as desirable agricultural lands as can be found anywhere in America. The South today is the pioneer country as it is the only section where low-priced farm homes can be procured. The cost of reclaiming southern cut-over and "wet" lands is said to be about one-fourth the cost of putting western arid lands in suitable condition for agriculture.

At the Forestry, Reclamation and Home-Making Conference in New Orleans the problem of utilizing and settling the South's idle lands will be considered from all angles including reforestation, livestock raising, dairying, fruit growing and agriculture in all its branches. It is hoped the Conference will result in an effective movement that will secure expansion of the federal reclamation policy into national scope so that other sections than the West may benefit from such assistance. All persons interested in the constructive development of the South are invited to attend and participate in the New Orleans Conference and all southern congressmen are urged to support its purpose.

SMALL CAR CONSTANTLY GROWING IN DEMAND

Looming large as one of the important factors contributing to the improvement of traffic conditions, not only in metropolitan centers but on main traveled highways where congestion develops particularly on Sundays and holidays, is the increasing tendency toward the use of the small light car.

Personal convenience, the element which enters strongly into the life of all of us, apepars as the principal incentive back of the growing swing of sentiment toward the more compact motor car unit

The public, quick to respond to things which insure further comfort and safety in motoring, has been observant of the advantages the small car has in the traffic line, its ability to stop quick, the ease with which it gets in and out of parking spaces and its general flexibility.

The response is apparent in the constantly growing dmand for the small car, a demand which has been unusually heavy since the first of the present year and which is further increasing itself as the enclosed car buying season approaches.

Men whose business keeps them on the move about town all day were not long in discovering the exceptional facilities afforded by the small car and they were quick to adapt it as their standard motor car equipment.

Owners of large cars, finding their movements more and more restricted as traffic congestion increases, are rapidly reaching the conclusion that an auxiliary motor transportation unit the small car is an essential business convenience.

Another interesting feature is the partiality which women drivers are showing for the smaller car. They find it more convenient and less fatiguing to operate, affording them a quick and convenient means of transportation for th chsopping tours, for little trips to market, for afternon calls and for meeting other family requirements.

And new buyers, profiting by the experience of others, in investigating the merits of the small car, find it meets all modern motoring demands with the additional advantage of easier handling in the traffic line, thereby effecting a greater elemeut of safety

Short wheelbase, small turning radius, ease of stering, the impossibility of failure to accomplish gear shift and do it noiselessly, positive brakes and noted for its dependability Ford which have it the [illegible] which might accrue or [illegible] has been effected in these cars by recent improvements in both open and enclosed types, resulting in better style and greater riding comfort.

AUTO OWNERS URGED TO BUY LICENSE

The following is a letter from Judge Reynolds to the people urging them to take out license before the tithe limit [illegible] and an extra fee is added:

I would again like to urge the people of this county as to the urgent [illegible] of taking out business license and automobile license before the rush comes on Under the new changes in the law relative to automobile license it will [illegible] be an impossibility to issue [illegible] of this county before the expiration of the time. The law allows until the first day of November to obtain [illegible] license before the extra fee is added, and the last legislature allows until the 15th day of November [illegible] tra fee will be added on automobile [illegible] I hope, however, the [illegible] aware of the fact that [illegible] you wait until the last day to get these license and are unable to do so on account of the rush, according to the law this extra fee will have to be added which will work an injustice to a great many.

Please therefore let me urge you to take out these license now if you are due them, so as to avoid the rush at the expiration of the time limit.

Very respectfully,

THE ONLY "SURE THING" IN THE INVESTMENT FIELD

The Advice of Honest Men Who Know, and Willingness to Be Content With Reasonable Return, Declared Only Safe Road to Assured Income.

"Success in life depends upon the investments made of talents and time," says an article on investing prepared by the Committee on Public Education of the American Bankers Association. "Future return will be gain or loss, according to these investments. That is a law of life which controls investment of money, just as it controls investment of talents." The article, which is particularly timely in these days when so many are being robbed by fake investments, continues:

In the business sense, the word investment relates to the use of money in acquiring ownership of property. Ownership may represent entire possession of property as of a home; partial ownership as holding stock in a corporation; or conditional ownership as in the case of buying a mortgage or a bond. When a person makes an investment in bonds, he is really loaning his money to the government or corporation issuing them. He will receive the interest which they earn as long as he owns them, or until they are paid off.

Ownership of great corporations is vested in individuals who have invested money in their stock or bonds. Many people regard the ownership of the United States Steel Corporation, for example, as differing from the ownership of, say, a small workshop. Yet investors in shares of Steel Corporation stock are entitled to the same rights, under the law, as the owner of the workshop. In the corporation, the owners hold certificates of stock as evidence of their investment, whereas the owner of the little workshop holds a deed as title to his land.

Capitalistic Laws Protect Investors

Because the laws stand for the equal protection of all investors, it is possible and profitable to make good investments. It gives an incentive to work hard and to invest. The person who wishes to invest must first work and accumulate funds with which to do so.

Bonds are always secured by mortgages on the lands, buildings or other property of the corporation for which the money has been used. When a bond matures the money must be repaid to the owner of the bond.

All investors are a part of a great financial system which gathers up and puts to work the wealth of the country for the mutual benefit, prosperity, and well-being of all. In America, it is possible for any one who is willing to pay the price of self-denial and hard work, to be an investor. Good investments made in early life by saving such small sums as may be possible, lay the foundation for providing the comforts of later years, when it is harder to earn a livelihood and when poverty often becomes the condition of those who have not practiced thrift in youth.

It is not wise for those without experience to undertake to make investments of their money without guidance by those who know. Many companies are constantly being organized to promote unsound schemes, referred to as "wild-cat." There are always solicitors ready to relieve people of their savings by the promise of big returns. The lure of great wealth is always a temptation by which thousands of thrifty people are deprived of hard-earned savings every year. Widows and orphans who have inherited money are frequently sought and made the targets of these fake... men. Misery and suffering are the usual results.

Greed Defeats Safety

Many people with small means also lose money because they insist on a high rate of interest on their investments. Safety of principal should be considered above large returns in interest or dividends. Small investors should never buy high-rate, speculative investments, in which there is a great risk, but should stick to those which pay a fair rate and which are ... to be safe.

To know whether an investment is worth, buying the investor should go to a banker, or a successful business man in whom he has confidence, get his opinion and act in accordance with it. In all probability this will mean the difference between successful investment and total loss of his money.

The banker deals with investments every day and desires to give all the help and information he can, and the business man has learned by experience the need of caution and careful judgment. They believe one should have a clear understanding of an investment before it is purchased. They know the need for avoiding stock promotion schemes and get-rich-quick ... which in many cases ... poverty and suffering. While many states have passed laws aimed to protect the public against promotors of fake investments, thousands of people annually fall victims to ... wiles, because they fail "to ... the ... of those experienced in ...

Good advice and temperate expectations mark the only road to safe investment and an assured income. There is no other certain way.

Sixty years ago 67 percent of our foreign immigrants came from England, Ireland and Scotland. These people were real workers and builders and came here for the purpose of becoming American citizens. Now 94 percent of the hordes that pour in through our ports are mongrels, in the broadest sense of the word, and have no conception of our ideals. They come to prey on us and destroy our institutions. It is time right now to shut the door.

THE GOOD ONES WILL COME BACK

The following taken from the editorial columns of the Birmingham News, is a real sermon on a real subject. The labor situation in the south has never been so bad during our recollection that it was necessary for labor to emigrate to live. We have our "hard times" but when we are going through a period of depression the whole country is doing the same and the farther north you go the harder you will find it to live. Our splendid climate makes it easier to live in the south than in any other section of the United States:

The News is in receipt of a letter from Detroit dated Oct. 14, and signed by one "Frank Brown, a Southerner," which speaks for itself:

To the Editor The News:

I would like to call your attention to the fact that there are hundreds of white and colored people from the South up here and they are out of work, some not properly clad and many dead broke. Hundreds of colored men sleep and live like wandering sheep. This can be seen nightly, where many sleep at the McGregor institute or at the mission on Bush Street.

There is work up here, but many more looking for employment than can be provided. Now, why doesn't the South get busy and get manufacturing concerns to establish business down there where fuel and house rent are cheaper than up here, and give these idle people work to do where the climate is ideal the year around - where there are thousands of acres of land lying in waste and owned by a few that want too high prices for it, and which they will never get, for this same land there will never do them any good.

All Southern folks would like to see the South justas busy and just as prosperous as the Northern States, and the only way to get prosperity is to do more and talk less, and if not, then why not?

The News very much fears that the Detroit correspondent is cherishing a delusion. As a matter of fact, the South is in sore need of manpower today and has been for many months. The South is prospering. The News has good reasons for knowing that only the lack of sufficient manpower prevents many manufactural expansions from being made. These developments cannot be made on guesswork.

The correspondent draws a pitiful picture of the wandering Southerners, both white and black, sleeping like stray dogs, in free missions in Detroit. The story is lamentable enough. God knows, to draw tears to the eyes of their relatives here in the South, or to the eyes of any one who has ever known hunger or lack of a comfortable place to rest. They apparently compose a part of the enormous exodus ... tured for many months ... Southern cities. They represent the ... class, doubtless ... but as the inefficient, the ... not shiftless and undependable itinerants ... tured by labor agents months ago in order to lure them from their homeland.

Something, unquestionably might be done by business agencies and commercial bodies in the South in the way of paying their railway fare home. But even at that, there would be no sort of guarantee that they would stay. They were lured away once— why should they not be lured again? Indeed, it may be that many of these idle workers seen lounging and loafing about McGregor Institute and the free missions may be very well content where they are, eking out a bare living by a day's work here, and a day's work there.

The South needs workers; both laborers and skilled mechanics. But it does not want manpower that can be lured away any day through lying labor agents or propagandists. The South needs manpower sorely, but it wants intelligent, loyal stickers, and not shifty and undependable itinerants.

A GOVERNOR ON TRIAL

By a vote that was only one short of being unanimous the Oklahoma senate has voted the suspension of Governor Walton pending impeachment proceedings against him by both houses of the legislature. This came as the climax of the spectacular career of the governor, during which he has suspended civil courts, prevented grand juries from functioning, superseded civil with military authority, prohibited the legislature from assembling in special session, and defied the very people in his attitude towards the holding of a recent election. In the beginning there was considerable outside approval of the governor's apparently fearless efforts to halt what appeared to be an epidemic of illegal punishments and acts of violence in Oklahoma. This approval gradually changed into doubt and then into disapproval as it became apparent that the ... ought fell short of justifying the means and methods adopted by Governor Walton.

Now the governor is on trial before the legally constituted tribunal, with the supreme judge of the state siting in the presiding officer's chair. The world outside the state of Oklahoma suspends judgement while the proper authorities make careful inquiry into Walton's record and arrive at their final decision with respect to his fate. Whether the governor obeys the order of suspension or not is immaterial. The chief concern is the final verdict of the senate sitting as a court, as provided by Oklahoma's constitution. —Age-Herald.

Rev. Frances Willis Barnett ... widely known and loved by the people of Alabama that if a political bee was to get in his bonnet all of the other candidates just as well go back home and start the plow. He is above anything like that though, so the boys are safe.

Everybody takes a rap at "father and mother" as bging responsible for the many shortcomings of the rising generation. This is not only untrue but is actually sinful. The boy and girl feel at perfect liberty to go the limit as long as the blame is all attached to "father and mother."

When it comes to financing a religious revival, or any other commendable enterprise, the people of Clanton are world beaters. They are the most liberal people we ever heard of. They don't do any blowing but they always dig up the cash.

We were indeed glad to meet our old time friend, Rev. J. A. Hornady, who is "78 years young," according to his own count, at the Soldiers Home last Sunday. He is just as clever and just as game as in the days of yore and it did our heart good to shake his hand again.

Five Passenger Four-Cylinder Touring Car
The Standard of Comparison

A Car of Greater Utility

Thoroughly representative of the 1924 Buicks, this four-cylinder, five passenger Touring Car is new from end to end. Its new body, frame, fenders and radiator, its new Buick valve-in-head engine—its four-wheel brakes, all exemplify Buick's policy of building in its cars greater utility and satisfaction with each succeeding year.

The minute attention to those details that make for greater comfort and convenience is well expressed in the new windshield, new ventilator operated by a push lever, wide, low and tilted seats and compact grouped instruments. This Buick four-cylinder Touring Car worthily maintains the Buick reputation as Standard of Comparison.

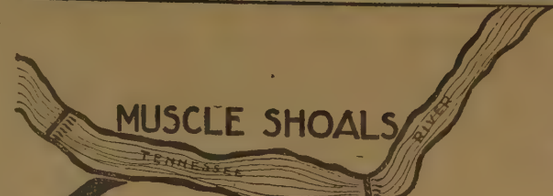
GORGAS

What Is It? Where Is It?



The Gorgas Steam Plant (also designated as the Warrior Steam Plant) is located on the Warrior River—

91 Miles From Muscle Shoals

It was originally built by the Alabama Power Company in 1917, and was enlarged by the Power Company for the Government in 1918 for war purposes.

Its equipment consists of two units, with a combined capacity of 67,000 horsepower.

It is the latest word in steam plant construction.

It consumes 1,200 tons of coal daily when in operation, at which time it supplies more than 50% of the Company's contract load, during low-water seasons on the Coosa and Tallapoosa Rivers.

The coal is mined in the "back-yard" of the plant.

It is connected with the power system by 110,000-volt transmission lines extending northward 88 miles to a point near Sheffield, and 26 miles southward to Bessemer.

More than 150 people are employed to keep Gorgas in operation.

Two hundred and ten (210) major industries in Alabama, employing more than 125,000 workers, look to Gorgas for continuous operation twelve months in the year.

It has no connection with Muscle Shoals. The Government's interest in the Gorgas plant was constructed from appropriations for armament of fortification; which was distinct from the appropriations under which the Governments's developments at Muscle Shoals were made.

Every foot of land on which the plant and village of Gorgas are located is owned by the Power Company.

One unit was in operation, and the foundation laid for a second unit, when the Government asked the Power Company to complete the plant.

The second unit and the 88-mile transmission lines were completed and in operation in five months from the time work was begun, an engineering feat seldom, if ever, equalled.

The entire plant and transmission lines now belong to the Power Company, $3,472,487.25 having been paid for the Government's interest.

The Power Company paid the Government as rental on its interest, approximately $310,000.00. The rental and purchase price represent 80% return to the government on its $4.750,000.00 investment in this plant. It is interesting to know that fifty-nine other pieces of war-time property, with an aggregate cost of $288,217,652.50, were sold by the Government for $24,423,216.89—only 8.48% of the total investment.

Defective Diamonds Made Perfect in Brazil—Only Small Loss in Weight Noted.

It is said that the process of restoring defective diamonds is almost a lost art, but a recent traveler in the diamond fields saw the operation performed by an old man of his acquaintance who seemed pleased to show his skill. The process is called burning and in Brazil is carried out as follows:

A small crucible is placed on the blacksmith's hearth, and when it is cherry red the flawed or lusterless diamonds are dropped into it with a spoon. Charcoal is then heaped around it and a blast is maintained until a welding heat has been reached. That stage requires about three minutes.

The crucible is then taken from the fire and examined. The diamonds are immediately replaced in the crucible and the heat is maintained a minute and a half longer. Finally the crucible is taken from the fire and, after a teaspoonful of potassium nitrate has been [illegible]

As soon as the vapor has dispersed the diamonds are scraped out singly and allowed to fall into a basin of water. The loss in weight is said to be a little more than 8 per cent, but the increase in value is nearly 100 per cent.

Suburban Life Not All Roses.

Most young married couples sooner or later get the desire for "a little place in the suburbs with a bit of ground around it." Sometimes their wishes are realized, sometimes they go to the end of their days with their dreams unfulfilled. Those who attain their goal generally find that suburban life is not all as they had pictured it. It is usually friend husband who has his eyes opened more than friend wife.

Friend husband lives and learns a great many things. Even if he has a little more money than the average he finds it's up to him to know how to do a lot of plumbing jobs, carpentry jobs and to learn something of electricity, for help in the suburbs along these lines is not always available.

Friend husband grumbles, especially to friend wife. But he learns and he does what's expected of him. He has his reward in turning patronizingly to his fellow worker who has not yet fallen for the country and saying, "You ought to live out of town, old man. Nothing like it in the world."—New York Sun and Globe.

Laws Against Kissing.

Kissing is considered an unhealthy practice by some people. A few years ago the physicians of Milwaukee prepared a bill for the absolute suppression of kissing, on the ground that the practice was hygienically dangerous.

The bill did not become law or it would have made Milwaukee more famous. But such laws existed in Puritan New England. In 1656 Captain Kemble of Boston was "set for two hours in the public stocks for his lewd and unseemly behaviour,' which consisted in 'kissing his wife publiquely on the Sabbath-day, upon the doorstep of his house,' when he had just returned from an absence of three years." Twelve years later "Jonathan and Susannah Smith were each fined five shillings and costs for smiling on the Lord's day." The smile, it would appear, was only less heinous than the kiss itself.

Pampered Egotism.

"How did men ever get that idea that they were more intellectual than women?"

"I think," said Miss Cayenne, "they got that way by paying attention to smart girls who know the surest way to flatter a man is to let him talk on and on while they mutely gaze as if he were simply wonderful."—Washington Star.

A FEW THOUGHTS

Not every man on Easy street has an easy mind.

It requires no agricultural knowledge to cultivate expensive tastes.

Don't court trouble unless you want to find yourself married to it.

Luck has a perverse habit of favoring those who don't depend on it.

People who keep their troubles to themselves also keep their friends.

It is never any trouble to discover arguments in favor of what you want to do.

"MASSA LAFITTE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis advises Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. De Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admittedly Jean Lafitte, at his country house. Lafitte, accused of the abduction of Mademoiselle Lestron, is warned of the approach of a military party seeking to arrest him.

Sazarac arose. The old buccaneer was sheathing his sword. Then he sprang to the great windows and drew the silken curtain. "I see the boat's lights," he grumbled surlily. "The city is in an uproar!"

"Monsieur," the guest turned to De Almonaster. "The thing I feared has come. My name, in some brawl on the water-front—"

"Your name?" shouted Johanness. "No! It is Sazarac they seek! Sazarac, the packet gambler! D—n!—they put the affair straight on Sazarac!"

"What of Sazarac?" Raoul advanced wonderingly.

The old bo'sun laughed, his eyes glittered. He turned to his chief: "If you had told us, Jean, we would have had the woman miles beyond recovery, ere the word was out."

"The woman?" Sazarac eyed him sharply. "Old man, tell me this!"

"First they rout the packets. Then beat out the levee wineshops. All that they knew was that you had vanished with the English woman! Jarvis, the fool, first told the tale, and no one believed him. Then the colonel's wife, then Carr, himself, like a madman to the authorities. She was heard to scream . . . a river guard says there was some commotion on a small boat off the rue Conti, but he thought it was a drunken revel. Dominique hurried me here to warn you—he, knew you were a guest of Monsieur! I did not believe you would be here . . . unless the English woman—"

The sea adventurer had sprung as if to seize the old man's throat.

"She—taken—kidnaped?"

"Why, the tale runs—down to the Barataria swamps! Sazarac was heard to say he would possess her, bond girl or free!" Johanness grinned. "Here is my sword, Jean—before you and the English woman wherever she be!"

De Almonaster was watching a boat's lights on the dark river. "They seek Sazarac, then? Monsieur, can we explain sufficiently where you were last night? I do not question, but you will see the position—"

"Was she not fair game . . . If my captain desired her?" glowered Johanness.

"You will be quiet, Johanness. Stand by to watch the approach." He turned to his host: "This seems some incredible jest. The lady vanished—it appears worthy of John Jarvis' telling—"

Old Johanness gaped upon him unbelievingly. "It would seem you deny knowledge of it! Sazarac was recognized standing before her hotel when all the town was abed. Sazarac swore he would claim her. It seems that not until late afternoon did a servant discover she had been seized in her room. Then came Jarvis' story, piecing the thing out. There is no doubt. The authorities are informed. The consul, the governor, the military!" He stopped, puzzledly watching his chief: "And Sazarac has vanished, you see!"

"There is work for me," muttered Sazarac to his host. "It is enough to say I had no hand in this. Come—throw the doors wide, Johanness!"

"You will have no chance! You will be recognized at once! It is a tale to hang on Jean Lafitte. The swamp, my captain, ere the dragoons come!"

"Monsieur," Sazarac spoke apart to Raoul. "She was to speak of some matter of which her life appeared to be the price. The mystery—Carr's mission. The consul's embarrassment. Who could have taken Miss Lestron?"

"To the swamps without doubt," growled Johanness, "but she cannot be hiddenf rom swamp eyes, Jean, if you seek her—there is the trail!"

Sazarac swept to action. "True! My place is there—and free to follow her!"

De Almonaster grasped his hand as he stepped to the dark. "You will send me word, sir? I am at your service, Monsieur—Sazarac!"

"The game is up for Sazarac! Lafitte, then, threading the secret swamp trails to unknown ends—Lafitte, again the fugitive, driven back to his old haunts as the hounds bay at the fox. Adieu, Monsieur! I am Lafitte."

De Almonaster heard a whispered laugh as the exile mounted a horse which the blacks had hurried from the stables. As he passed the gate, the old yard-man raised a frightened cry and dropped his flambeau.

"Massa Lafitte!"

De Almonaster ground his teeth in fury. "Silence that fellow!" he hissed to the house blacks. "Death to the one of you who whispers a word of this night's matters!"

Silently he ran back, up the rear way, and a moment more stood idly by the candles that shone on the remnants of the feast. The bronze knocker at the door dropped loudly. The frightened servant opened it. A young captain of the American dragoons stepped in hastily. He saluted, embarrassed now at his abruptness.

"I Demand Him, Monsieur!" The Young Officer Was Getting Angry.

"Your pardon, Monsieur de Almonaster—"

"Ah, Captain Roche! Will you enter?"

"Thank you. We are seeking information. A young woman of the party of Colonel Carr of the British mission, waiting to embark for Vera Cruz, has been seized. The clues lead to this west shore, apparently near your place, Monsieur. The British consul threatens to involve the two governments—it is said that the gambler, Sazarac, has done this trick . . . and that he is in reality Jean Lafitte, turned up from the dead!"

"Ah—incredible!" murmured De Almonaster. "The famed beauty, Miss Lestron! Possibly I am the one man in New Orleans who has not seen her."

The young officer seemed more embarrassed. "I am sorry to say, sir, that my information was to the effect that this Sazarac was your guest. It is regrettable that I must inquire and search—"

The host bowed: "My compliments to the governor, and say that, tonight, Monsieur de Almonaster Roxas did, indeed, entertain at dinner, Capt. Gaspar Sazarac of the American explorations."

"Ah, but—" gasped the dragoon captain. "It is a villainous affair that is charged to Lafitte, the returned freebooter! Where, Monsieur, is he?"

"Where could he have gone? The river on one side—the swamp on the other. It is lamentable!"

"I demand him, Monsieur!" The young officer was getting angry.

The host concealed a yawn. "I recall that, once, in the old days, the governor of Louisiana demanded him. He sent word to the governor that he would receive the governor at any time the governor wished to call at the Red house on Grand Terre. The governor did not call, I believe."

Captain Roche glanced impatiently at the tall black hats of his dragoons glistening in the torchlights. "Well, then! A cordon of troops on the back plantation roads. The man will be taken before morning!"

"A long day, Monsieur—" murmured De Almonaster.

The officer turned perplexedly. "At least, this! Did this Sazarac resemble Lafitte, the outlaw?"

"They might have been brothers," said Raoul languidly.

"What did he have to say, this bandit?" retorted Captain Roche.

"He praised the woodcock. As for the broiled pompano, it was superlative. And my wines—ah—you should have heard!"

"Perdition, sir!" roared the American captain. "It must be as I have been told—half of old Louisiana was in league with this pirate! The town is laughing, even at this infamy put upon the subject of a friendly power. If Sazarac was Lafitte, they gossip that she probably fled willingly with him!"

"Not to my broiled pompano," mused De Almonaster. "Sce? He left nothing of it save the bones."

CHAPTER VII

In the Old Haunts.

"Now, see—the captain!" roared old Johanness, shaking the pole support of the palmetto thatch in his truculence. "I—the bo'sun of the Petral—brought him. You older fellows, there! He commands you in this affair of the English woman. And you"—he leveled savage eyes upon the younger islanders who crowded under the thatch—"does any man speak against me?"

There was no answer. The sweating, motley crew pressed closer to stare at Jean Lafittee.

Gaspar Sazarac—henceforth the Lafitte to the gathering members of his old adventuring crew which once had numbered a thousand men at the Red fort on Grand Terre reef sixty miles to the southward—arose and looked at the silent faces.

"First," he said sternly, "I want to know this matter of the muskets stolen from the English ship at the Algiers wharf. It has a bearing upon this mystery of Mademoiselle Lestron, I imagine. The customs officers and the British skipper alike are in an uproar over it. Black Mike—speak!"

"An itch to be looting—that and the drink," muttered Black Michel, uneasily. "An Irisher in the English crew, who once had sailed with Paul Jones, and later taken and impressed into the king's navy—he wished to desert, and meeting up with Bohon, and John Crackley, who had fled from the navy but a week before, he proposed to seize the muskets. It appears they were unloaded by a mischance from the Genaron. The skipper protested to the customs that the arms were destined for the Mexicoes and not for this port. And while they quarreled of it, our fellows lugged them off. Old Budge was the dock watchman, which made it easy."

"And you, Black Mike—what was your part in it?"

"Oh, nothing! They smuggled the stuff on my lugger, that was all, and cached it on St. Joseph's island. Surely, my captain, you will not reproach me over a little affair like that!"

There was a hoarse laugh. Even the captain smiled.

"Thirty cases of new muskets—three thousands rounds of ball—who knows when we might need them?"

The captain looked out to the tidal bayou winding through the pathless morass to the Mexican gulf. At the water's edge, past the scraggy, hurricane-riven oaks, lay a dozen trappers' pirogues—slender swift canoes hollowed from a single cypress log. Beyond, at their moorings, swung a trio of red-sailed luggers, with the smoke of their charcoal pots drifting lazily into the air.

"Bohon—" Jean summoned the swarthy Portuguese smuggler from the throng. "Your lugger—twelve men to the sweeps, for there is no air. I must see the deserters from the English ship. The Genaron was to convey the British mission to Vera Cruz. See here—you! Has there been among you of late, any man who whispered against the American occupation of Louisiana? Not openly, as did Captain Lockyer of the Sophia, who, as you older men will remember, landed at our fort with a royal commission for me, and the king's gold for all who would betray New Orleans to Pakenham's fleet?"

There was a shout. "Aye! The British got our answer at Chalmette! Who fought the Yankee bat'ries but our Grand Terre gunners!"

"Even Old Hickory did not question where they got their skill wi' the twenty-four-pounders!"

"Mademoiselle Lestron on the Genaron, and the bark adrift to the passes!"

Plans Tips From Arctic.

Scientists almost unanimously agree that weather conditions throughout the entire world are governed largely by conditions in the arctic zone. With this in view Akbard Ekerold, Arctic explorer, is building a radio station at Jan Mayen island, the tiny cone of an extinct volcano in the Arctic ocean north of Iceland. This, the explorer claims, is the fountainhead of weather conditions.

Sunday School Lesson

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 28

SOME MISSIONARY TEACHINGS OF THE PROPHETS

LESSON TEXT—Isa. 60:1-3; Jonah 4:10-11; Micah 4:1-3; Zeph. 3:9.

GOLDEN TEXT—"The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."—Isa. 60:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Jonah.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Love for All Nations

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Prophets as Missionaries.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Missionary Message of the Prophets.

Perhaps the best way to teach this lesson will be to note the message of the individual prophets.

I. The Message of Isaiah (Isa. 60:1-3).

1. Its Central Fact (v. 1). Israel's light, her Redeemer, has come. The primary meaning of this is not the incarnation of the Redeemer, but His manifestation in glory and power as He comes back to this earth to reign as Israel's King. This glorious fact is presented under the figure of a bright sunrising. It will be a glorious morning without clouds dawning upon a dark world.

2. The Ringing Summons (v. 1). Messiah himself calls Israel to arouse herself from her long sleep of indifference and shine forth in the glory of her glorious king.

3. The Darkened Earth (v. 2). In spite of all the progress of the arts and sciences spiritual darkness—blindness touching spiritual things—has settled down upon the earth. It will be peculiarly gross in the last days. It can only be dispelled by the glorious appearing of the Lord.

4. The Blessed Result (v. 3). The Gentile nation shall come into the light, being attracted to Zion by the appearing of the Lord. In the midst of such darkness the sudden appearing of the light shall attract the nations and draw them to Jerusalem.

II. The Message of Jonah (Jonah 4:10, 11).

Jonah was commanded by the Lord to go to the wicked city Nineveh and proclaim its destruction in forty days. He started in the opposite direction in order to escape this unpleasant task. A storm came up and the superstitious sailors threw him overboard. He was swallowed by a great fish and after three days and nights was cast upon the shore. Having learned the needed lesson he went to Nineveh and preached with such earnestness that the whole city repented. The mercy shown by the Lord in sparing this wicked city so angered Jonah that he went out of the city and improvised a shelter where he could see whether God would really destroy Nineveh. To protect the prophet, God made a gourd to quickly spring up and throw a shade over him. When the gourd died and left Jonah exposed to the burning sun he prayed for death. The particular message of Jonah is that God is great in mercy to all the nations when they penitently turn unto Him from their sins.

III. The Message of Micah (Micah 4: 1-3).

In this message the prophet portrays the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom in the last days. Three things are predicted:

1. The Supremacy of His Kingdom (v. 1). It shall be exalted above all the kingdoms of the earth. Its glory shall attract the people from afar.

2. The Extent of It (v. 2). Many nations shall come with the urgent request that others accompany them. The kingdom of Messiah shall be universal, it shall extend from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth.

3. It Shall Bring Peace (v. 3). Enmity will then be taken from men's hearts and they will love each other. When their hearts are changed they will no longer wage war against each other, they will even destroy their implements of warfare. War will continue till men's hearts are regenerated. The way to get wars to cease is to get men to love Jesus Christ.

IV. The Message of Zephaniah (Zeph. 3:9).

Zephaniah declares that following the judgment upon the nations God will turn the people from their impure speech so that they may call upon Him. He declares that God's will is that all nations turn from their filthy conversation and call upon Him. He desires that all nations should come unto Him.

BLACK-DRAUGHT HALF A CENTURY

Praised by an Oklahoman Who, After His Father's Example, Has Used It, When Needed, for 50 Years.

Grandfield, Okla.—Mr. G. W. Tisdale, a well-known resident of this city, says:

"I have used Thedford's Black-Draught—I believe I can safely say for fifty years.

"I was born and reared in Texas, Freestone County, sixty-four years ago. I have been married forty-four years. My father used Black-Draught before I was married, and gave it to us. . . .

"For forty-four years of my married life, it has had a place on our medicine shelf, and is the only laxative, or liver medicine, we use. We use it for torpid liver, sour stomach, headache, indigestion . . . I don't think we could get along without it, knowing what it has done for us, and the money it has saved. It is just as good and reliable today as it was when we began its use. My boys use it and they are satisfied it's the best liver medicine they have ever used."

Thedford's Black-Draught is purely vegetable, easy to take and acts in a prompt and natural way.

So many thousands of persons have been benefited by the use of Thedford's Black-Draught, you should have no hesitancy in trying this valuable old well-established remedy, for most liver and stomach disorders.

THE ETHICAL SERVICE BUSINESS RENDERS

BY J. H. PUELICHER

President of the American Bankers Association

I sometimes think we lay too much stress on the technical efficiency of our business instrumentalities and too little on their moral services.

J. H. Puelicher

Is it enough to say to our radical opponents of the present capitalistic order that it effectively feeds and clothes and houses and furnishes us with physical comforts and pleasures and therefore it is good? That is not enough. They can rightfully tell us that, even though a system may minister to our physical well-being, if it stunts us morally, if it does not positively make us better ethically, it is an inadequate system.

The general answer to this assertion is obvious. The very fact that our industry, commerce and finance serve us so amply with the materials and means for physical well-being gives us the opportunity to build and support our churches, to foster the arts, to develop our great educational system,—to be kind to one another.

But need we deal in generalities? Do we not find in the direct effect of our business upon the individual much to improve his ethical standards? To toughen his moral fiber? Is it not good for the personal character of the race to do business as [illegible] living it?

Let us take the business of banking, for example. Is it a mere mechanism or is it a vital moral force? Does it do more than, by facilitating [illegible]ion, raise the physical standard of living, or is there anything [illegible]nt in the manner and methods [illegible] that raises the moral [illegible] living as well?

[illegible]ke of our business is done [illegible]ans of credit. The great bulk [illegible]t credit is obtained from the [illegible] It is obtained from the banks [illegible] have character,—be[illegible]re honest, because they [illegible],—because they can be [illegible].

If [illegible]id not have these qualities [illegible] not do business with [illegible] could not do business at [illegible]. We say banks deal in [illegible] that is but a way of saying [illegible] honor and honesty. They [illegible] business structure with the [illegible] in man.

[illegible]aking plays in our busi[illegible] is growing. That means [illegible]faith of men in each other [illegible]. The more men who come [illegible] with characters that en[illegible] to credit,—the more men [illegible] that to gain credit at the [illegible] must possess themselves [illegible] that win them un[illegible] the higher becomes [illegible] standards of the nation.

[illegible] this a great moral service [illegible] renders? It is a greater [illegible]on for our present financial [illegible] than even its wonderful efficiency in providing us with the ma[illegible] things of life. No greater service could be rendered the nation.

AMERICA'S NEW PLACE

Many Americans fancy that, because labor is well employed and our [illegible] have been reporting substantial increases and improvement [illegible] the [illegible]ion period, normalcy [illegible]. The truth is, what [illegible] better normal in the future [illegible] an entirely different thing [illegible] what was considered normal [illegible] to the war. One reason is, our new place in the world as the leading creditor nation. That change is a permanent one. We are not going to return to the old position of debtor nation. Bankers in the agricultural communities have come to the conclusion that we cannot afford to maintain an attitude of isolation and that opinion is not a personal one. The men I have talked with are voicing the ideas of the people with whom they have daily business contact.

A great many politico-economists have warned against America's entrance into the European situation, asserting that our foreign trade makes up less than 20 per cent of our production, and therefore is too small an item to be vital or to risk our investment in. They forget, and most people who have listened to them forget, that the unimportant 20 per cent is the difference between full employment of our industries and labor and much unemployment and business depression. If a manufacturing enterprise is running at 90 per cent of capacity, it may be making a fairly good showing of earnings, but it is not running at normal and is not earning the margin which it should earn in order to be fully prosperous. It appears obvious that we shall have to build up foreign investments in this country. But it will be necessary to go slowly in the matter of foreign investments. There must be assurance that whatever we loan will be used for productive purposes.—William E. Knox, Second Vice-President, American Bankers Association.

SUGAR PRICES AND THE TARIFF

There is a bit of humor suggested by the announcement that the tariff commission on January 15 will begin public hearings as a part of its inquiry into the effect, if any, of the tariff duties on the price of sugar. [illegible] the American consumer [illegible] [illegible] that the [illegible] determined to go to the bottom of the question and hopes to be able when it has completed its investigations to tell President Coolidge as to the advisability of action under flexible provisions of the tariff. Then follows a lot of stuff about the thoroughness of the investigation, the broad scope to be included, and all that sort of thing.

There is little doubt that the investigation will be quite far-reaching, and that the report embodying what was learned will be decidedly voluminous. It will be noted that months after complaints came from every part of the country over the extortionate charges for a household necessity, the tariff commission decides to start an investigation. Meantime millions of [illegible] have been gouged, profiteers have gathered in all that the traffic would stand, prices for sugar have gone down under the pressure of the consumer was allowed a little breathing spell, and fluctuated one way or another for months. While preparations were being made for an investigation by the tariff commission looking to the further time-consuming task of compiling a vast array of figures and issuing a report which few citizens of average intelligence could understand, beneficiaries of the tariff have been "mopping up," so to speak, and, as usual, there is no relief for the consumer.

This sort of thing appears ridiculous in the light of the imposition upon millions of people who are called upon to fill the pockets of the tariff barons and accept the situation as a matter of course. A national political campaign is approaching, however, and the voters must be jollied in one way or another until after the ballot boxes are closed. "Into the effect, if any, of tariff duties on the price of sugar," says the announcement from the investigators, as if it were not well known that the tariff is keeping up the gouge upon the American people not only in household necessities, but in nearly everything else they need.—Age-Herald.

SINGING AT OAK HILL

The Prohis think they have hit upon a winner now. They are trying to entice the wary Henry Ford into the race for president on a prohibition ticket. Henry is too slick a duck for that. He likes the publicity, but when it comes to a show down Henry is going to build more flivvers and make more boodle.

The farmers of the United States are sweating now under the most oppressive tariff ever imposed in this country. If a higher tariff on wheat would help the price to the farmer, then why is it that wheat has been declining in price ever since the present robber schedule went into effect? The capitalist is the only person a high tariff can possibly benefit.

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUME 3 — CLANTON, ALABAMA, NOVEMBER, 1, 1923. — NUMBER 8

SENATOR J. THOS. HEFLIN SPEAKS

Last Saturday was an epoch making day for Clanton and Chiltof county. At 10:30 a. m., according to announcement, Senator J. Thos. Heflin addressed the citizens at the court house.

From early morning cars and other vehicles began to deposit their loads of interested citizens on our streets, coming out to hear "Cotton Tom."

Senator Heflin arrived on the 8:56 north bound train and was met by a large delegation of ladies and gentlemen. Mrs. J. P. Hayes and Mrs. Upchurch, both splendid workers and warm democrats, took him in their car and escorted him to the Exchange Hotel.

Promptly at 10:30, the house being already filled to overflowing, Senator S. M. Adams, the hero of our State senate, arose called the house to order, and in a few splendid sentences introduced the great and famous champion of the common people, who arose, amid such loud and long applause by the waiting audience, that even his great heart must have felt warmed to the work in hand.

We all remembered Senator Heflin as an interesting and brilliant orator and we were in no way disappointed on this occasion, but he was different. The strenuous and bitter fight he made for his people and for the farmers and laborers of the whole United States in the long months of the last congress, when he started in single handed, to cope with the evil tricks and machinations of Wall Street, and fought out the fight to a glorious victory, when even his warmest friends felt that he was committing political suicide, had broadened his vision and inspired his soul with a new zeal and fervor that could but almost awe his audience.

He was witty at times and profoundly eloquent at others, but the honest sincerity that beamed in his countenance and the mathematical precision with which he marshaled his facts and figures and drove home the grand truths which he had been fighting for, was an added luster to the effectiveness of this game champion of the people and illustrious orator.

At the conclusion of his masterly address he asked all of those who endorsed his Senatorial labors to stand up. The vast audience rose as one man while the applause must have shaken the very foundations of the building. It was simply a spontaneous ovation that few public servants are ever fortunate enough to win.

When the meeting was over hundreds of people crowded forward to shake the speakers hand and bid him God speed in his great work.

Finally he emerged from the court house when he was immediately surrounded by a number of his Clanton admirers, both ladies and gentlemen and hurried around to the Exchange Hotel, where to his surprise, a sumptious luncheon had been ordered in his honor and where he sat and ate with his loyal supporters. Here was where his wit effervesced and sparkled like new wine and where the laurels of his recent Senatorial victory shined at their best.

The following parties sat at the table with him: Mrs. J. P. Hayes, Miss Irene Jones, Senator S. M. Adams, Messrs. W. W. Fox, chairman of the county Democratic Executive Committee, Dr. J. P. Hayes, J. L. Johnson, R. P. McDavid, Col. G. C. Walker, M. C. Broadhead, Jno. Vanderveer and W. B. Cor-

A BIG BUY

Mr. C. B. Cox seems to have confidence in the business future. Last Saturday he bought his third steam shovel.

When you consider the fact that these little toys cost $10,000 a piece, it looks like his confidence in the future prosperity must be pretty strong.

Mr. Cox is, at present, building a railroad over north of Tallassee and has several other smaller projects on the string. He recently wound up his part of the Shelby highway project.

STILL AT THE HEAD

Hon. Jno. Rogers, chairman of the State Highway Commission, is a man of wide business experience and since the unwieldy commission has been cut down to a membership of only three, we feel like Mr. Rogers will be able to get more real business cooperation than he has had in the past, and we confidently look for some real intelligent and systematic road building now.

Chairman Rogers is in favor of rendering real service to the public instead of handing out a plum here and there, to please some political friend.

Mr. F. A. Gulledge of Verbena was at the Heflin speaking last Saturday and was among the first to stand up in the vote of endorsement. Mr. Gulledge is a veteran democrat and recognizes the sound of the true gospel when he hears it.

Many friends called on the Senator all during the afternoon, even surrounding him up to the moment that he boarded the south bound train at 5:36 enroute to Dothan, where he went to take up an itinery that will cover South and Southwest Alabama.

There was no word of rancor in the address of Senator Heflin here, but it was fair, plain and instructive from start to finish. We feel like he has done much good to the voters of Chilton county because he explained many things that we did not understand before.

LAYING OF CORNER STONE

A Great Masonic Gathering Will Lay the Corner Stone at the Splendid New Methodist Church Nov. 12.

One of the most notable events that has taken place in Clanton for years will occur at the massive new Methodist church building here at 11 o'clock a. m. Monday, Nov. 12.

While this beautiful structure is already far advanced towards completion, the excerises of laying the corner stone will take place at that time. It will be done by the Masonic fraternity and every oldge in this section is urged to come and lend their aid. Grand Master Julian F. Spearman, of Anniston, will be in direct charge of the Masonic features of the occasion. We annex here his letter of acceptance:

"Anniston, Ala., Oct. 27, 1923,

"Hon J. B. Atkinson,

"Clanton, Ala.

"Dear Bro. Atkinson:

"Your letter advising me that Monday, Nov. 12 has been set as the day for laying the corner stone. The date will suit me all right. Please let me know what time of the day you will expect the ceremony. Also will it be necessary for you to select an orator for the occasion With best wishes.

"Yours Sincerely,

"JULIAN F. SPEARMAN,

"Grand Master."

It is also hoped that Dr. Geo. B. Stuart, of Birmingham can arrange to come down and deliver the address. If not, some other able orator will take his place.

The ladies will have dinner on the ground at a reasonable price to feed all who are hungry.

Everyone is cordially invited to attend and witness this memorable ceremony.

The Grand Master will expect a full turn out of the brotherhood to assist him in the ceremonial.

Monday, Nov. 12, at 11 a. m. is the time and the new Methodist church the place. Come.

HAVE WE A CHAMBER OF COMMERCE?

We have been asked this question so often of late by people who wished to get in touch with that body that, in all seriousness and with no intention to criticize or interfere, we are asking really for information.

We never hear of them having a meeting and one would suppose that if a body of this kind really existed and was functioning, publicity would be the one thing they would want.

We have inquired of several former members of the Chamber that once existed here, but they could none of them give out anything definite. They said they really did not know.

Well, if there is one, we have a special matter we wish to refer to them. Perhaps no other person in a town has an equal opportunity with an editor to learn certain things pertaining to the interest or the detriment of the town. We have hundreds of inquiries from abroad as to business location, business outlook, population etc. We like to answer all of these inquiries and in as favorable manner as possible.

There is one point where the government census figures always give us a black eye. Every person who lives in Clanton, and in the surrounding country, knows that the figures put down in the cenus do not really give us justice by half. Our town is rightfully entitled to 25000 or 3000 population, but, you can not make your foreign correspondent believe that in face of the census report.

We want to see this great business handicap removed. We want people abroad to know that we have a real city with all of the luxuries and modern conveniences that go therewith, for we have them and should have proper credit.

Senator Heflin, who visitied us the other day and who was here only three years ago, was thunderstruck at our wonderful development. So is every stranger that comes in our city on his first visit. The census reports naturally causes them to expect to see a mere villiage and they are shocked when they see the reality.

We would like to see the Chamber of Commerce or some other real civic organization, take this matter up and discuss it. If we can not extend the present restricted corporate limits to take in all of the legitimate parts of the town, then why not have a special census taken, covering the real population that is part of and rightly belongs to the city. We could do that and then promulgate these actual figures, along with an explanation, that would, at least, have a tendency to put us before the public in a true light.

As it is now our city suffers in many ways from this grotesque situation. We have a real live, progressive city, the largest one in Central Alabama, and we pass muster abroad as only a little country villiage.

Contractor Price made a week-end visit to see the home folks at Ozark last Saturday and Sunday returning Monday.

A PUBLIC MENACE

There are about two corners right in the main business district of Clanton, where, unless our officers change things promptly, a chapter or two of serious tragedy is going to be written in blood.

A class of young, impudent and worthless negroes congregate, on by evenings, on these corners and actually block the sidewalks and are such low down beastly, big-feeling scavangers that they do not pretend to move an inch to even allow white ladies to pass. If they must congregate and loaf and spew out their vile profanity and offensive cigarette smoke on the streets, the law explicitely says that every loiter must clear the sidewalk and stand on the curb.

The way the thing now stands someone is going to call an automatic, or some other weapon in play to protect his women folks from being insulted.

If present conditions are not broken up right at once, about our next reference to the matter will be to write up a tragedy. The present conditions will certainly bring it.

DEATH CALLED THEM BOTH

One of the saddest visitations that death has ever made in our vicinity occurred Tuesday morning at the home of Mr. Ellis Mims, in the Maple Springs community.

The spirits of a devoted husband and wife linked together their snowy pinions and went out into the great beyond, united in death as in life. The silken cords of love between this pair were too strong for even the scythe of death to seger, and so he gathered them both in his harvest and they are living out their dream of marital happiness unbroken even by death.

We refer to the passing of Mr. Willie Mims and his wife, Mrs. Zora Mims. Within the brief period of five minutes they both breathed their last.

Mr. Mims was a victim of the great world war. While over there doing his bit he contracted that fearful scourge, tuberculosis, from which he could not recover. His wife, it is supposed, in her constant attention and association with him also became infected and both of them were doomed. By their passing away together it would seem that even inexorable death must have tempered his visit with mercy and deferred to their wishes an dpermitted them to make the journey over the great Divide together.

Mr. Mims was the son of Mr. Ellis Mims, who is a well known and prominent farmer of the Maple Springs vicinity, and his wife was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Vinson, of the same neighborhood.

The deceased were buried yesterday at the Maple Springs cemetery where a large audience of relatives and friends assembled to bid this young couple a final adieu.

Rev. Hughes was the officiating minister.

To these doubly bereaved parents and other relatives the Chilton County News would extend its most sincere sympathy.

Up Hill—Or Down?

None of us are standing still. In these modern and strenuous times there is no middle ground. We are either progressing or retrograding; we are either going foward or backward. To which do you belong?

Are you spending more than you make? If you are doing this, or even if you are merely spending all you make, you belong to the down hill class, for you are losing the opportunity to lay up something for the future every day that passes. "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

On the other hand, if you are saving persistently and systematically, be it ever so little, you are in the up hill, or progressive class; you are not a drone but are on the road to independence, and will some day be a power in the land, for there never was a truer saying than "money is power."

Let us help you on the up-hill or progressive road.

Steam Plants Carrying Load For Four States During Low Water.

EIGHT BIG UNITS NOW OPERATING IN ALABAMA

Company Finds Surplus, At Same Time Caring For Industrial Growth.

BY LEON W. ESTERMAN, Industrial Editor The Birmingham News.

Despite low water, the Alabama Power Company is caring for the needs of its customers in Alabama and diverting power to Georgia and the two Carolinas to pull them past the low water period, operating eight units, its total, in Alabama—five steam plants, including Gorgas and the Sheffield plant in the Muscle Shoals District, and three hydro stations, including Lock 12 and Mitchell Dam.

The power is being sent into Georgia and relayed to the Carolinas, where industries have been suffering for lack of power and in some instances closing down. The surplus power in Alabama, not affecting this supply for this state [illegible] in the Carolinas and [illegible]

Converting Alabama Coal Into Electricity Saves Many Industries

Electricity is energy. Like time, it passes without pause. Electricity cannot be manufactured and stored away for future use. It must be manufactured instantly, as required, whether one or a thousand turn on light and power. This necessitates plant capacity equal to the greatest demand, and constant watchfulness on the part of the men and women employes of the Power Company.

The surplus steam power which the Alabama Power Company has been, and is now able to send to the Carolina and Georgia industries, comes from the Company's four principal steam plants, and particularly from the Sheffield and Gorgas steam plants.

The Company is amply meeting all demands, supplying a 100% service at home and a maximum out-of-state load of 40,000 horse-power daily, despite the fact that Alabama's rivers are experiencing one of the longest droughts ever recorded in this section. This is made possible by the big steam plants being located at the mouths of Alabama coal mines.

As hydro developments now under construction are completed and the necessary steam reserve provided, Alabama grows in importance, not only as a producer of adequate and cheap power, but as the strong link in the chain of interconnected systems which serves as a means for conserving the State's natural resources and brings a revenue into the State that would otherwise be lost, thereby enriching Alabama and her sister States in like proportion.

It is the policy of Alabama Power Company to—Serve Alabama First

then to dispose of surplus steam power wherever it may be needed.

GEOGRAPHY LESSON

The foundation stone for the first Moslem mosque to be built in France has just been laid in Paris with elaborate and impressive ceremony.

The kingdom of Nepal, that lies at the foot of Mount Everest, is unknown to the world except by the reports of natives.

Thirty-four days are occupied in a voyage from New York city, via London, to Batavia, Java, a distance of 12,800 miles.

A hundred years ago the Nimrod islands were sighted by whalers in the southern Pacific, but no one has ever seen them since.

Icebergs attain to much larger dimensions in the southern hemisphere than in the northern. A berg 82 miles long was encountered in the year 1893.

Bombay, via the Suez canal, is 8,120 miles from New York and 9,536 miles from New Orleans; via Cape of Good Hope it is 11,250 from New York, and via the Magellan strait it is 15,064 miles from San Francisco.

Cream does not contain the valuable and needed substances carried in skimmed milk, except vitamines.

Skimmed milk contains milk sugar, the prince of all carbohydrate foods; it contains protein, the prince of all nitrogenous foods, and it also contains vitamines.

When the fat is removed from milk, the by-product is called skimmed milk. It is nine-tenths water, but is very nourishing, its chief nourishing contents being albumen and sugar.

Generous son.

Habits of industry formed in youth, quoting an adage, remain with one through life. To work all through life is some people's ambition. Others, however, would retire early—too early, in fact—would retire before they begin.

When Jackson persisted in giving play the better of the argument when his father wished him to work, the fond parent reproached him severely.

"Boy, what do you mean by loafing on the job?" he said with heat. "Get busy and do something."

"Ain't I busy?" son responded.

"Yes, busy doing nothing."

"Well, I know, but I don't want to work. I hate work."

"Hate work! Why, work is a pleasure to me."

"Well, dad, you can have all the pleasure you want."

ABOUT MEN IN GENERAL

No gentleman is ever too busy to be polite.

Aggressive men sometimes acquire reputations as knockers.

We feel sorry for the poor man whose wife talks in her sleep also.

The best way to convince a woman is to let her go ahead and do it and regret it.

Sometimes an old man who seems as spry as a young one will say he feels so.

An extremely polite man frequently succeeds in making the other men feel awkward.

A man could make money with five fingers if he didn't have ten for it to slip through.

Whatever a man's air castle is, he probably wouldn't like it very well when he got there.

There is always an opportunity waiting for the man who wants to be a friend in need.

The trouble with a great many men is that they expect a month's vacation every time they do a day's work.

Men might be more gossipy if it were safe; though most of them are imperfect enough to be charitable.

Man wants but little here below, but when he fails to get it he howls just as much as if he wanted the earth.

A conceited man should visit a cemetery and realize how many truly great men have died without the world shutting down.

The man who can be happy with what he has is infinitely richer than the man who has to wait for what he may or may not some day get.

Busy Individuar.

Missing the most mischievous of her third grade pupils from her regular place in filing out of the room into the corridor, Miss Jones rushed rather indignantly ahead of the class to locate the delinquent. Seeing the youngster at some distance down the hall, turning this way and that, the while she waved her arms windmill fashion toward scores of pupils who scurried in various directions, Miss Jones called out, "What are you doing there Margaret?" "Oh, nothin', Miss Jones," came the calm answer. "I'm just trying to regulate traffic."

PASSION FOR CLASSIC LORE

President William Henry Harrison Checked In His Inaugural Address by Webster.

The part the classics play in this modern world grows less and less; allusion to the stalwarts of the ancient world is seldom encountered, for instance, in the speeches of public men; the heroes of Greece and Rome are forgotten largely except for the student. What President of these United States today would begin his inaugural address thus: "It was the remark of a Roman consul, in an early period of that celebrated republic"? For such was the opening sentence uttered by President William Henry Harrison at his inauguration.

The hero of Tippecanoe had said of his soldiers after that battle, "Every private in the whole army, on that occasion was a Leonidas, Epaminondas, or Horatius Cocles." He was a reader of the classics, and liked particularly "Plutarch's Lives." So it was natural perhaps, that his inaugural address should start off as it did. That it did not bristle from beginning to end with classical illusions is due to Daniel Webster.

A day or two before the address was delivered the secretary of state was to be seen coming out of General Harrison's residence, seemingly no little agitated. "What is the matter with you this morning?" inquired a friend unexpectedly coming upon him; "you seem agitated, Mr. Webster."

"Agitated, sir? And who would not feel agitated that had committed the crimes, murders most foul, and from malice aforethought, of I know not, how many Greeks and Romans."

But for Webster, Militades would have fought Marathon over again, the Horatii re-exterminated the Curtii and Quintus Curtius have taken a second leap into the fatal chasm, had the general's original purpose been carried out. It was said at the time that Harrison, while he reluctantly consented to the exclusion of other Roman celebrities, insisted upon retaining the Roman consul in his opening sentence, to which Webster finally yielded on condition that his name be suppressed.—Kansas City Star.

The Never-Said.

"Yes, dear; I have been playing poker. I was not detained at the office."

"That hair you found on my shoulder, love, is from my stenographer's head."

"Yes, judge, my home brew has an alcoholic content of six per cent."

"Your honor, I was driving forty-eight miles an hour because I was in a hurry."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By Charles Tenney Jackson

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"WELCOME, CAPTAIN!"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer, John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. Do Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admittedly Jean Lafitte, at his country house. Lafitte, accused of the abduction of Mademoiselle Lestron, is warned of the approach of a military party seeking to arrest him. He escapes to the swamps of Barataria.

The old dogs laughed the harder. Rough shaggy fellows in shirts of faded green and blue, barefooted for the most, filthy muskrat traps dangling at their belts where once they had worn cutlass and pistol before the President's pardon.

"Nothing of sedition," answered Bohon. "Few of us dare go to the city even now. There is always a peg on which to hang one of Lafitte's men. Let a sheep be stolen up in the north parishes, and at once the Baratarians are charged with it!"

"Come," said the chief. "The older of you with Bohon on his lugger. The others to their camps. Not a man of you shall lift hand against the law for me. If you can serve me further you shall be summoned. Come—Rigo! Black Mike—Nez Coupe. We shall talk to the deserters first."

They made way for him to the beach. Old Rigo was laughing softly:

"Old days are come! Jean—and at once, a fair enterprise! A woman—and a ship! And down at the old isle where Yankees burned our fort, I have pumpkins growing—beautiful yellow pumpkins! Eh, bien! Perhaps we shall see another color o' gold among my pumpkins, wi' Jean among us once more!"

Six men to a side, the lugger crept down the mirrored bayou to where it opened to a shallow lake red in the warm sunset. Back on the Temple, the whispering swampers scattered to their pirogues. Fast and wide the word would go through watery forest aisles and into the grass jungles of Barataria. Never a customs boat could leave the city but that keen eyes noted, and paddling couriers spread the warning far to the most secluded chenlere of the deep swamp.

"Look you," growled the steersman, Bohon, to Joe Rigo, "the old fellows gathering like buzzards, furbishing up rusty dirks and smelling venture on the very wind that brought Jean to us. Name o' G—d!—I am young again!"

Bohon glanced at the first stars. Eastward a dim smudge showed on the grassy bayou margin. "John Kelly will be there—and Mariano, the Manilaman. And others, Captain. There will be drinking, for three casks of wine went from the Algiers dock along with the arms. And the English lads, Captain—you will not have them delivered to the consul?"

"Did you ever know," laughed Jean, "of me kicking back any man to the press gangs—white, yellow, brown or black—who ever reached the swamp?"

"Do you remember when our men went recruiting to the Acadian dances and shook their gold before the country youth—a speech, a song, a revel—that would carry every restless spirit of the parishes back to our fort to serve you, Jean?"

There was a shout in the starlight. To the lugger's side swept a half-dozen canoes. Old whiskered fellows would not be denied—theye clambered over the gunwales, and stood roaring their welcome to the one-time dictator of the Barataria coast. A torch gleamed among the palmettos as Bohon's men slid the anchor to the mud. Then they crowded aboard to shout, to shake his hand, amazed that he lived, eager to hear of the lost leader.

But Bohon led the way ashore. The one-time privateers trooped behind the guides to another palm-thatched camp under which were stored the stolen wine casks, the boxes of ammunition and scattered muskets. The English deserters, red-eyed, reeling from drink, looked upon the party with suspicious eyes, although the swamp men had heralded Lafitte's coming.

"Welcome, Captain!" shouted old Budge, the dock watchman. "I came with these lads. It must have been in the very air that you had returned, for —of a sudden—I had the notion of plunder! Look you—two more lusty seamen from the Genaron are here!"

"The mate laid twenty lashes to our backs because we could not explain Burke's get-away," said one. "We slid down the chains, sir, and are done with the king's shilling!"

"Lafitte!" cried another, "I sailed in a bark that took a round shot from you once off Trinidad! Come, my hand to it that I serve you now!"

The laughter and the drinking arose once more. Clearly the exile perceived that the swamp outlaws had no other thought than that he had come to revive again the marauding against the West India merchantmen.

He led aside the eldest of the deserting seamen. "Come, of the Genaron? What is her mission in the gulf?"

"I wish I could answer, sir! She sailed regularly, but she is stuffed with arms. Vera Cruz was to be her entry port, yet why carry arms to the king o' Spain's men? We were warned to say nothing of her cargo. When the Yankee customs discovered them, I hear the British consul was embarrassed. Colonel Carr had hand in it, the fo'reas'le said."

"Carr?" spoke up a youthful deserter eagerly. "Why, that is the blustering officer who wrangled with the skipper when they bundled the woman aboard!"

"The woman!" demanded Lafitte. "What of this—quick!"

"But the other night. The watch was hustled below when they brought her. Then it was up-sail and away without waiting to settle this quarrel about the muskets which a drunken supercargo put off and into the customs' hands by a mistake."

"Why, That Is the Blustering Officer Who Wrangled With the Skipper When They Bundled the Woman Aboard."

"Sailed!" The chief laid hands upon his shoulder. "Lads, is it true?"

"Some dirty affair, sir. Burke and Crackley and myself saw it. Slave, free woman of color, to be sold in the Indies, or wherever she was—we cannot say. They took her to the master's cabin. There was no law to it, I warrant, but when we lads saw that the Genaron was to put out hastily we took our leave o' her!"

Lafitte swept about upon Bohon. "Mademoiselle Lestron on the Genaron, and the bark adrift to the passes! What can she make, sir, with this wind?"

"Steerage, nothing more. She will not have passed English Turn—"

"Forty men by daylight at the river side! She shall be boarded in midstream, Bohon. Johanness—back to the Temple and summon every lad!"

There was a gasp of incredulity. The leader had turned back to the smuggler's landing. The older privateersmen followed. The deserters stumbled among their wine casks. Then the leader of them, John Crackley, a long, thin-faced villain of the crimp-gangs, roared to the others.

"I told you, bullies, if ever we found this Lafitte there would be rough work to do! The Genaron—burn her to the water's edge, say I—and a knife to the mate for the cat he laid on our backs!"

The messengers paddled off in the starlight while about Jean gathered his old friends. And presently, across the shallows, came another small boat, swept by four black oarsmen to the smuggler's stern. A cloaked figure stepped out and grasped Lafitte's hand.

"Monsieur de Almonaster!"

"The mask is useless, sir! I came to warn you. The dragoons seized my house-servants, and bullied them into confession. Sazarac! The city shouts with it! Jean Lafitte has stolen the English colonel's ward!"

"Sir, you know better. I, indeed, know where she is. Mademoiselle Lestron has been put to sea. I take it, to hush her mouth. She would have spoken something dangerous to Carr's purposes. What these are, in all, we cannot say. But the lady of the river packet is a prisoner on the Genaron."

The count stared at him bewilderedly. "None in the city knows! Carr roars his indignation—he leads the cry that Jean Lafitte put his old Barataria refugees to the abduction. Half a dozen expeditions are fitting out to search the swamps. Captain, you cannot linger here!"

"The Genaron—" said Lafitte curtly. "If she does not fetch a sailing wind before she makes the outer passes, sixty of the Baratarians will swarm her chains for boarding before daylight. Will that be answer enough to the city, that Lafitte is here again? —the old fox in his hiding place?"

"A mad scheme!" muttered Raoul. "But—ah, well! For a woman! I trust, sir, you see it is an act of piracy against the vessel of a friendly power in American waters?"

The exile laughed grimly. "The dice are against Lafitte, the bones, man!"

"Sir, does she know your identity?" pursued De Almonaster gravely.

"Can you ask? Lafitte—for whom her countrymen have a gallows built in every port that flies the king's flag? Come, sir! This is man's business! Every hour counts—every moment. She will know, soon enough, when a proscribed outlaw frees her . . . and turns away to face his ring of enemies."

And suddenly old Bohon dashed to his feet and held a finger to the air. He touched the skin with his lips and held it again.

"D—n!" he shouted. "The air is changing. It is swinging northerly! A breeze in the river, and she will make the passes before a man of us could lift hand against her!"

It was true. Five minutes later the lugger lurched slowly around in the tide. The big sail began to lift and stream in the starlight. Johanness came aft cursing the stir of the water.

"I tell you it cannot be done. If we had a thousand armed fellows in the narrows what could they do with cockleshell dugouts to board a ship drawing sail?"

They listened to the lapping wates on the lugger's side. And now, from the oak-grown islet, there came a stumble of feet, a clatter of arms, and then a splashing in the starlit shallows.

"Aye, bullies!" roared John Crackley. "I said if ever we met this Lafitte there would be proper work for you!"

The deserters and the younger swamp islanders were swarming out, drunken and with ribald cheers, under their smoky torches. "A-Barataria!" one of the pardoned outlaws cried. It was the old boarding sea-yell of the Black Petral's crew, and it struck with a curious cold prophecy to the heart of Lafitte. Fate was bearing him, do what he might, back to the lawless years of the youth he had put by.

"The devil's hand is in this," grumbled Johanness. "This wind—it will be a good ship's wind in the passes. The Genaron will be in blue water tomorrow noon!"

"It is fatal to our plan of boarding her in the river," mused Lafitte. "And the plan must change with the wind. If we had a weather boat off the old isle—"

"A boat!" growled Nez Coupe. "But in all these coves, where once we counted forty sail and two hundred guns, there is nothing worth a nutshell on blue water. Bah! We took the President's pardon!"

"A ship!" snarled Black Mike. "Seize a ship! Dan ation!—how does a man find a ship? Why, name o' G—d—he takes her!"

And suddenly De Almonaster whirled on the silent leader with glowing eyes. "A ship? Why, there in the city—moored at the Place d'Armes!"

"The Napoleon ship!" shouted Johanness. "Why, curse my eyes, that is a ship, but death to the perfumed gentry that own her!"

"The Seraphine?" cried Bohon. "Why that beauty would sit ahead o' the English bark and laugh in any weather!"

Lafitte was staring half-amusedly at De Almonaster. "Monsieur, the Seraphine lies in the very heart of the city, under the guns of every fort and warsman there!"

"Well, then—threescore of your swamp fellows gathered secretly by the Algiers shore, and crossing the river at midnight could board and have her under way ere the port awoke. Once off the passes, she could overhaul the bark. She is gunned for the best of them, but there would be no need. The Genaron could not fight—she would give back the lady . . . of course the admiralties at Washington and London would howl, but"—the young man shrugged indifferently—"the affair would be over."

"Over? Monsieur, are you mad?"

"Ah, I had forgotten that I possess a certain interest in the Seraphine! Of course, I really know nothing about such madness! I am amazed—I denounce it much as I denounce this Saz-a-rac who—a dinner guest of mine—is discovered to be Lafitte, the pirate!"

"You peril your life and your future, Monsieur."

SECRET OF MAKING FINE DOUGHNUTS

Wire Frying Basket for Doughnuts Is Handy.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the secrets of success in making doughnuts is to use a plain mixture such as the one given below. A rich dough tends to absorb more fat in frying than a plainer one. A fairly firm dough is better than a very soft one, although too much flour is undesirable and will result in a doughnut that is not so light and fluffy as one would desire. It should be handled lightly, but rolled smooth, for a rough surface allsorbs more fat.

Frying doughnuts in fat that is not hot enough results in a poor, greasy product, usually fried too long. Rolling and cutting the dough too thick to cook through in a short time is a mistake. Failure on the part of the cook to judge when the doughnuts are done, or any other cause that keeps them in the fat too long tends to make them greasy.

Best Frying Temperature.

A frying temperature for the fat of 365 degrees F. was found by the United States Department of Agriculture to be satisfactory. It should, if possible, be tested with a thermometer. Doughnuts rolled about one-fourth inch thick can usually be fried in three minutes at this temperature if they are turned to make them brown evenly. They may be fried in one and a half minutes if forced under the surface of the fat during the frying by pushing a wire frying basket down on them. Doughnuts fried by this method absorb less fat, brown evenly, and are much less apt to crack than when turned in frying. The basket can be used for draining the doughnuts after they are removed from the fat, or they may be drained on brown paper. When they are dry they may be rolled in pulverized sugar.

Doughnuts made by the following recipe and properly fried are delicious when fresh and will keep well. The amount of flour used, however, will vary; smaller amounts of hard wheat flour will suffice.

Plain Doughnuts.

4 tablespoonfuls baking powder (level measurement)	1 cupful sugar
1 teaspoonful salt	1 tablespoonful butter
1 teaspoonful cinnamon	2 eggs
½ teaspoonful nutmeg	1 cupful milk
	5½ cupfuls flour

Another good recipe also tested by the United States Department of Agriculture is given below:

Potato Doughnuts.

1¼ cupfuls of sugar	4 tablespoonfuls baking powder
2 tablespoonfuls butter	1 teaspoonful salt
2 eggs	1 teaspoonful cinnamon
½ cupful riced potatoes	½ teaspoonful nutmeg
½ cupful milk	5½ cupfuls flour

PORK PARTICULARLY RICH IN VITAMINS

Beef and Veal Found to Be Relatively Lower, While Amount in Lamb Varies.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Ever since the discovery of the presence in certain foods of those mysterious beneficial substances now known as vitamins, it has been thought that they were to be found in animal tissue most abundantly in certain of the internal organs, especially the heart, liver and kidneys, but the bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture now announces that they exist in the muscle fiber of beef, veal, mutton, lamb and pork, and that pork is particularly well supplied with them.

Various cuts of the different kinds of meat were tried, and in every instance pork was found to be relatively rich in vitamins. Pork tenderloin, fresh ham, smoked ham, and pressed boiled ham were tested and the results were much the same with all of them. Beef and veal were relatively lower, while the amounts contained in lamb varied a great deal.

The experimental work consisted in feeding tests with rats and pigeons. Growth was the determining factor in the case of rats. In pigeons deficiency of vitamins was indicated by the development of polyneuritis, a disease to which they are peculiarly susceptible.

This new evidence on the distribution of vitamins in meats should not lead to the conclusion that certain meats are of low nutritive value because they are deficient in vitamins. Meat is one of our most important foods and would continue to be so even though it contained no vitamins.

FIX GREEN-LEAF VEGETABLES

Good Way to Prepare Is to Chop Fine and Add Water—Cook Direct Over Heat.

A good way to prepare the green-leaf vegetables is to chop them fine when raw, add a very small quantity of water, and cook them either in a double boiler or directly over the heat. When so prepared, they cook tender very quickly; therefore, this method tends to preserve the vitamins. The cooked greens may then be seasoned and served in the usual way, or they may be added to milk soups or to meat stews just before they are served. Finely-chopped lettuce can be mixed with butter or other table fats and used as sandwich filling, suggests the United States Department of Agriculture.

BEST CLOTHING DECORATION

Make Selection With Regard to Fitness for Garment and Material on Which Used.

Materials for the decoration of clothing should be selected with regard to their fitness for the garment and the material on which they are to be used. Cotton dresses of the tailored type, such as are worn in the house, on the street, or for business need little decoration other than machine stitching, buttons, and separate collars and cuffs of the same material or of organdie, pique, or light-colored materials. The dresses of sheer materials for afternoon wear, graduation ceremonies, and such occasions may be very simply finished with cordings, tiny frills of lace, ribbon girdles, and fine net collars; a bit of color may be introduced sometimes merely in a string of inexpensive beads. Wool dresses may be trimmed with buttons, braid, or wool embroidery. With these also may be worn separate collars and cuffs of crepe georgette, satin, organdie, net, pique, or linen. Silk dresses for afternoon wear should be kept as simple in type as others; pipings, cordings, embroidery, and net, organdie, or crepe georgette collars and cuffs are suitable for decoration and finish.

Mississippi Lady Suffered Severe Pain in Her Back and Side and Was Troubled With Sick Headache.

Brookhaven, Miss.—Mrs. Annie Russell, of this city, says that she was suffering such severe pain in her back, she often felt unable to straighten up. "I would take sick headache," she says, "and lie abed more than a week.

"My head would ache, and my side would hurt and be so sore to the touch," continues Mrs. Russell. "I was nervous, too,—that terrible feeling one has when she feels she has stood about all she can. I was up and down . . and as cross as I could be.

"I was advised by a neighbor to take Cardui, which I did for I felt like another dollar or two spent wouldn't hurt. It didn't; it helped!

"It was not long till I noticed a change in my condition. My side got better. I gained in weight, and ate, slept and felt just as well as could be. After (taking) six bottles, I didn't have any more trouble with my side. I know it was the Cardui, for I didn't take anything else. I have taken it two or three times since as a tonic when I felt run-down in the Spring."

If you suffer with womanly ailments, give Cardui a persistent trial. It should help you. At druggists'.

This is court week and our local [illegible] are stirring around like a busy farmer at harvest time.

The average woman of 30 and the man of 60 begin to get nervous when the question of age comes up.

We would rather claim kin with a decent monkey than with some of the people we have known.

Don't forget to pay your poll tax. There will be three very important elections next year.

This would be a glorious old world if everybody really wanted to do right. The trouble is they don't want to. They want to make money.

We expect to see some people try to make prohibition an issue with Gabriel when he arrives to sound the last trumpet.

We don't believe the pearly gates are big enough to let a fellow enter who can be cruel to a little child or to dumb brutes.

There are people so prejudiced that they will not believe a thing contrary to their creed even when they are seeing right at it.

"A dog that will carry a bone will drive one." Keep this maxim in your mind when that pretended friend brings you a foul story on your neighbor.

Next year is going to be full of important elections. You will be sorry if you don't pay your poll tax so you can vote. Make a sacrifice, if necessary and be certain to pay your poll tax.

As we have said before, if you can do this job any better than we are doing it please come on quick and get it. It needs you.

Senator Heflin sowed some good seed in Chilton county last Saturday that will doubtless bear fruit in the future.

The sidewalks are thoroughfares for people to walk on and are in no sense intended as places for loafers and loiters to congregate.

Had it not been for advertising Coca-Cola would hardly be known outside of Georgia but the continued and judicious use of printer's ink has sold it all over the world. Do you see the point?

According to the way it totals up in our mind, either a great many people will get to heaven on a plea of ignorance, or there will be pitifully few found plodding the "straight and narrow way," beyond the gate.

A contract will be let by the city on Monday, Nov. 5, for the building of a good stretch of sidewalk. This work will be done to grade and we trust the contract will be let to an experienced man and one equipped to do it right.

Traffic conditions in Clanton are really first rate now and it is such a relief to all decent people. Now and then a half baked speed maniac dashes through but when he gets through he is afraid to come back.

The crossing bell recently put in at Second avenue by the railroad has already ceased to mean anything to the average autoist. It will mean a whole lot in court when you sue the railroad for damages for dashing into one of [illegible]

The good ladies of Clanton, in conjunction with the city street department have beautifully cleaned off the cemetery. They deserve, and no doubt have, the hearty thanks of every citizen in town. Too much cannot be said in their praise.

His alleged candidacy for president is one of the cheapest and most shameful efforts we ever knew of being made in an attempt to injure a really great man at home. COMMISSIONER SCRUGGS REPORT

A few days since Highway Commissioner Scruggs, who resides in Birmingham, threw a bomb into the camp by making an adverse report on the Shelby county highway project.

It would seem that the commissioner must have been "asleep at the switch" to have allowed this work to go forward, for a year or more, under the daily supervision of State and Federal specially trained engineers, and never have discovered until this late day that the work was faulty and not up to the specifications.

We can but feel like that he is seriously mistaken, for the great preponderance of evidence in the case is flatly opposed to his statement.

It is a fact, known by us all, that experienced road building engineers, trained for the work, and with years of successful road construction to their credit, have been in constant and unremitting charge of this project from the very first day that it was started. They have inspected, checked and passed on every load of material that has been used, and not only that, they selected the kind to be used and ordered it put in before the contractors ever moved a peg. These being the facts, we believe it is entirely reasonable to suppose that Commissioner Scruggs has made a woeful mistake and one that is calculated to delay the work on this very important project for an indefinite period if the other Commissioners decide to override the combined judgment of both the State and Federal engineers in charge, and take up an investigation

In this connection it might be well to call to mind the fact that a great corporation of Birmingham slag dealers have been sore and disgruntled ever since it was decided, by those in charge of this project, to use stone instead of slag as a base for the road. They have been unremitting in their efforts to bring about some kind of a kink in the construction that might ultimately result in providing them a market for a large amount of slag. We do not say that they are responsible for the finding of the alleged defects in the work, but we do not have the slightest doubt but what they rejoiced when they read the report of Commissioner Scruggs.

So far as we are concerned, it is much more reasonable to believe that those experienced engineers, who were in constant supervision of the work, and who had a reputation as road builders gained by many years of unremitting work and study to maintain, would know what to use and how to use it much better than Commissioner Scruggs, who probably never built a road in his life, and never gave the technique of road building a moment's study.

We have had entirely too much haggling and red tape winding already in this highway building and the time has come to do some real work and stop this wire working, political debt paying and grafting and get down to real honest business and build some roads.

We feel just like, under the direction of the new Commission, we are going to get some real service.

OUR THANKS

Just occasionally a real gem of pleasure wedges its way into the rugged chain of life that binds a little country editor to a treadmill of endless worry, and he gets an opportunity to inhale a few breaths of freedom and enjoyment.

Such was the case with us last Sunday afternoon when Mr. Tom Parrish, the directing genius of the "Parrish" emporium and his good lady, stopped at our door and picked up the editor and his better half for a spin in the country in his Chalmers.

We went way up beyond Thorsby and had a most delightful airing. Our thanks are extended to this handsome and clever pair.

Henry Ford is having more fun out of the American public than a stack of monkeys. He jumps from pillow to post in politics and then watches the scramble some people make trying to follow him. Henry Ford has got about as many political convictions as a hen has teeth. He is making money and not buying votes these days and is the greatest publicity expert the world ever saw.

WHAT WE WANT TO SEE

Procrastination, modesty, timidity, or what ever you may call it, has failed to get the people living along the proposed line of the B & M highway a darned thing.

We have certainly tried out all of these methods sufficiently to be convinced that such virtues are not appreciated any more—at least by the Board of Highway Commissioners.

Now, what we propose to suggest is that we form a long-winded, persistent and brass- plated lobby, composed of citizens from all along this proposed line and have them to camp perpetually on the trail of the Commissioners until we get a little recognition.

We need a lobby like the one that Prattville got up, that will be so everlastingly persistent in urging their claims that, at last the Board will have to grant us a loaf or two or go out of business. Be on hand in season and out of season and talk so much and so fast that no one else can get in a word edgeways.

Ring the changes so often and so vehemently that the Commissioner's dreams at night will be frescoed with gigantic capitals, "B. & M. H."

Make them know and for a surety realize that there is such a project as that on the bills and that very project was the main reason that caused the voters to tax themselves with a $25,000,000 bond issue.

Some of you interested people who can spare the time take this matter up and lets go to work, even at this late day, and try to get one main trunk highway built in Alabama before all of the money is spent on little segregated projects that start nowhere and go to the same place. Let the whole people have one road in the deal.

ENGINEER KELLAR

Some little time ago certain parties undertook to coerce Engineer Kellar into their way of thinking by framing up some charges against him about the manner in which certain road contracts were let.

They made a most signal failure in both respects. They neither succeeded in "using" him nor in smirching his standing and character as an able, honest and competent man for the job.

He is still holding his same connection with the new Highway Commission and will continue to render to the State the benefit of his wonderful efficiency as a good road expert.

A well behaved negro is a valuable citizen anywhere and is treated better in the South than in any other land we have ever heard of. A trifling, imprudent, gambling, thieving negro is a curse to the very air he breathes and will get it in the neck no matter where he goes.

What is the reason a person picks up a bill of lost money on the street in such a quick and secretive manner? Does he intend to steal it himself or is he afraid some other fellow will see him and claim it? There is an evident lack of confidence in human nature somewhere here.

It has truly been said that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." "If you want anything done do it yourself" is also another very true saying. We have examples of these old sayings very often in the Democratic party of Chilton county.

THE MAN FOR THE JOB

We feel like every citizen of Alabama should feel proud of the appointment of Hon. J. T. Suttle, of Phoenix, to a position on the new Board of Highway Commissioners.

Mr. Suttle is widely known as one of the very best and most thorough business men of the State. He is fair and square in all of his dealings and is a man who can not be swept off of his feet by either flattery or guile. He looks into every detail of the business he handles and knows where he is going before he takes a step. He is preeminently the man for the place and, under his administration, service is going to take the place of extravagance. Watch him!

GOING STRONG.

The sale of Woco-Pep by Jno. T. Ellis & Sons, local distributors, began in earnest last week and is going strong.

The retail sales at their city filling station amounted to more than 1500 gallons for Saturday and Sunday alone.

Their wholesale business has outgrown their equipment on the very first jump and they are putting on an additional oil truck this week.

Woco-Pep seems to be a popular fuel with autoists and has come to stay.

The store of W. T. Womble, at Mt. Creek, burned last Sunday night. It was a brick building with a good top and the fire was confined to the one place.

Mr. Womble was preparing to move to Haleyville and had just completed taking stock in the store. He had something over $3,000 worth of goods on hand.

We understand that he carried some insurance but we could not learn the amount. It is to be hoped that he is not seriously embarrassed by the loss.

Move to Utilize South's Cut-Over and Wet Lands

Immense areas of cut-over, swamp and overflowed lands in the South now are lying idle and serving no useful purpose. President Harding, in his first message to Congress, said there were at least 79,000,000 acres of these lands "which may be reclaimed and made as valuable as any farm land we possess." President Harding commended federal assistance for reclamation of these tracts.

It has been satisfactorily demonstrated that cut-over and "wet" lands if reclaimed, drained and stumped, gradually can be transformed into as valuable and productive farms as can be found anywhere in the United States. Some of the finest agricultural lands in the South today are reclaimed cut-over tracts.

Heavy yields of corn, Irish potatoes, oats, cotton, rice, velvet beans, sugar cane, sweet potatoes, cowpeas, cucumbers, cabbage, beets, lettuce, carrots, peanuts, chufas, alfalfa, clover, watermelons, all kinds of fruits, hay, forage and other crops, have been produced and are being harvested annually on reclaimed, cut-over and "wet" lands. Markets and transportation for farms in many of these areas already have been developed. Climate is decidedly favorable for settlers, the growing season is practically continuous the entire year and the farmer in the South has weather favorable for outdoor work almost every day.

Among the principal purposes of the Forestry, Reclamation and Home-Making Conference to be held in New Orleans, November 19-23 are to devise ways and means to utilize these idle lands through either reforestation, livestock raising or agriculture and to secure for the South a share of federal assistance in reclamation which heretofore has been given only to the West. The list of speakers at the New Orleans conference includes cabinet members, governors, United States senators and congressmen, railroad executives, high government officials and experts, prominent land owners and students of reclamation and settlement from all parts of the country.

Among the subjects to be discussed will be the need for more farm homes, reclamation for home-making, forestry, grazing and farming, assisting settlers, revision of the reclamation law, land settlement methods, animal industry, safe guarding the home-seeker, selective immigration, and farm tenantry.

THE HENRY FORD BOOM

Although the enthusiasts favoring the candidacy of Henry Ford for president apepar to be growing in numbers and organization, yet there has been no reliable information connecting Ford himself directly or indirectly with the movement or indicating his attitude thereto. A recent dispatch from Detroit says that failure on the part of the Dearborn Ford Club to obtain from its favorite any statement as to whether or not he would accept nomination by a party the various associated clubs might organize lends color to the theory that the manufacturer has not inspired the political activity in his behalf, nor indorsed it. Inasmuch as third parties are almost invariably losers, though holding in a way the balance of power, and since Ford himself believes firmly in success, it is hardly likely that any third-party movement would interest him.

The reasons for activity in behalf of the Detroit manufacturer are various. Since Mr. Ford is a man of great wealth, there are naturally those who are willing to undertake the responsibility of spending for him such sums as he may be induced to plate at their disposal. How many of the leaders of the Ford boom are influenced by this motive it is impossible to calculate, but their number cannot be negligible. There are thousands who believe that Mr. Ford is a man of integrity uninfluenced by political motive and would act sincerely in the public behalf. There are many who acclaim Mr. Ford's business and executive ability, and would fain see this talent devoted to the administration of public affairs. There are thousands who believe that Mr. Ford has been unjustly kept out of the opportunity to develop the great potentialities at Muscle Shoals, and who would support him in the hope that this important undertaking would be advanced and that the tremendous investment there would be redeemed. There are thousands of the "common people" who fervently believe that Henry Ford is their friend and would be their friend if elevated to the highest office within their gift.

Through it all, however, the only word from Mr. Ford is that given publicity some weeks ago, to the effect that he considers the time inopportune for him even if he could be elected, for he does not regard the public mind ripe for the businesslike type of government he has as his ideal. There is an undeniable majority of people in some sections of the country, perhaps almost nationwide, who believe that the Detroit manufacturer can best serve the public welfare by developing Muscle Shoals into a stupendous demonstration of the feasibility of prodlicing commercial and agricultural necessities at a cost far below that indicated by prevailing market prices. This great body of people would regret any obstacle that would prevent Ford from operating Muscle Shoals and would persuade him to enter the field of politics and thus obligate him to abandon the power and industrial project that has taken such a firm hold upon the public imagination and aroused such a volume of public sentiment in its behalf.—Age-Herald.

SINGING AT OAK HILL CHURCH LAST SUNDAY

Last Sunday was the occasion of an all day singing at this place. The united singing society combined with other singers from different parts of Chilton county rendered one of the best musical programs ever listened to in this part of the county. The class was composed of a bunch of live singers who can deliver the goods right off the bat when it comes to singing. In the forenoon the following directors conducted sessions: E. L. Glasscock, Harrison Hayes, Chester Maddox, James Franklin, O. L. Devaughn, Ralph D. Grant and Henderson Hayes. This brought us up to the noon hour and a bountiful dinner was spread by the good ladies unstingily and before all.

In the afternoon we had the pleasure of listening to the direction of other noted singers including Bud Martin, E. H. Foshee, Vester Campbell, Lee Grant, W. M. Devaughn, L. T. Grant, A. H. Glasscock, with W. M. Devaughn and L. T. Grant each directing the second time. The class sang beautifully and sweetly "In Your Mother Meet Her In The Skies" directed by Master Jack Cobb. The Verbena quartette was present and rendered several selections. The quartette is composed of W. M. Devaughn, L. T. Grant, O. L. Devaughn and Ralph D. Grant. Their singing received a high note of praise from [illegible] who heard them. The Jemison [illegible] composed of David Childress, [illegible] Glasscock, Vester Campbell and A. H. Glasscock were present and rendered [illegible] selections which also brought forth high notes of praise.

Organists for the day were Chester Maddox, Misses [illegible] kinson, Gena Collins, Flossie Cobb, Miss Hayes and Messrs. Ralph and Lee Grant. E. L. Glasscock acted as chairman for the day and in his usual good natured way made everybody feel welcome and perfectly at home.

The whole day was pronounced a success, and was expressed by many who came from different parts of the county that after being made acquainted with the Oak Hill method of entertaining visitors they were anxious to again hear the call to come back and be with us again for another day of this kind. And we are always anxios to extend a glad hand of welcome to our many friends who visit us. We sing here every Fourth Sunday evening; preaching every First Sunday at 11:00 a. m. Class every Second Sunday 11:00 a. m.; Prayer Meeting every Wednesday 7:00 p. m.; Sunday School every Sunday 10:00 a. m. The public is invited to attend all our services.

DOCTORS WANTED TO OPERATE

Mrs. Quillon Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her from an Operation

Muskegon, Michigan.—"After doctoring for eight or nine years with different physicians without any relief at all, they said at last that medicine would not reach my case and I should have an operation. I had heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and often saw it advertised in different papers where some women had suffered just as I did and got well and strong again by taking the Vegetable Compound. I decided to see what it would do for me, and before I had finished the fourth bottle I was much better, the weakness stopped and the severe pains in my sides left me. I am now much stronger and do my own work and work in the factory besides. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound and give it all the praise."—Mrs. NELLIE QUILLON, 17 Morris St., Muskegon, Mich.

Women should heed such warning symptoms as bearing-down pains and weakness, for they indicate some female trouble, and a persistent and faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will seldom fail to help.

The Answer.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Separatists, Communists and Reactionaries Make Things Lively in Germany.

GOV. WALTON IS IMPEACHED

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RHINELAND separatists, Bavarian reactionaries, communists in revolt and socialists dissatisfied gave Chancellor Stresemann and the German reichstag a lively time last week. On the surface it seemed the old empire was on the point of dissolution, but closer study of the situation leads to the belief that the German federation will hold together for some time yet, though the states probably will be more autonomous and less closely united, and the dominating influence may shift from Prussia to Bavaria.

Enthusiastic young separatists, led by an elderly merchant named Lee Deckers, proclaimed the Rhineland republic on Sunday. Starting at Aix la Chapelle in the zone occupied by the Belgians, the movement spread to other cities during the next two days, the police giving way quietly and bloodshed thus being avoided. The French and Belgians remained neutral, seeking only to preserve order. Matthes, Dorten and Smeets, the more prominent leaders of the separatist plan, hurried to the scene and the first-named took command, Deckers being set aside. It was admitted by the wiser ones that the coup had been sprung too soon, and this became evident as the socialists, communists and workers got into action. At Aix, Wiesbaden, Mayence and other places the separatists were routed from the municipal buildings, and Matthes and his associates departed from Coblenz, where they had set up their temporary government. At Crefeld, a large city, on the other hand, the separatists defeated the police in a long battle in which twelve men were killed and 200 wounded. On the whole, at this writing, the Rhineland republicans may be said to have failed. However, there was a rumor that their efforts would be counteracted by the proclamation of a republic favorable to the reich.

The communists, incited by soviet Russia, started a revolutionary movement on Tuesday. Orders were issued by their central executive committee in Berlin for the sabotage of the railways, and the work started in Hamburg. Armed bands cut the railway to Lubeck, barricaded the streets and attacked the police stations. The reichswehr, police and more conservative citizens turned out against them in full force and for many hours there was fierce fighting in Hamburg and its suburbs. Warships from Kiel and armored cars were sent to the assistance of the authorities, and thirty hours after the revolt began it had been effectually squelched. In other localities the Reds broke out and are still fighting.

Bavaria appears to be getting the upper hand in Germany. Minister of Defense Gessler tried to depose Gen. Von Lossow, military commander in Bavaria, who sided with Dictator Von Kahr. The general refused to submit and was supported by the Bavarian directorate. At first it was believed Stresemann would send troops to enforce Gessler's orders and that such a course would be supported by the socialist government of Saxony, which naturally is opposed to the reactionaries of the neighboring state. But the chancellor called the state premiers into conference and, receiving only qualified support from them, announced: "The government is ready to follow the road of understanding with Bavaria. The government also is ready to open negotiations with the states as soon as possible to discuss the question of greater independence, with the condition that the questions of settlement be on a constitutional basis."

This capitulation of the government enraged the socialists and it was said the ministers belonging to that party probably would quit the cabinet.

Bavarian socialists on Wednesday proclaimed a republic in the Bavarian Palatinate, adjoining the Rhineland on the south. The French representative on the Rhineland commission gave the movement his approval, but it was squelched the same day when the local parliament refused to support it.

GERMANY, through Chancellor Stresemann, appealed to the allies to examine the nation's resources and capacity to pay reparations, and asked that the government be permitted to explain the measure adopted to stabilize money and balance the budget. The chancellor's note frankly admitted Germany's indemnity obligations, but urged the impossibility of continuing payments at this time, owing to the financial and economic collapse. The note, which was presented to the reparations commission, said the German experts had examined the Belgian plan and were ready to make comments and suggestions on it. It was said this communication made a favorable impression on the British, Belgian, Italian and Japanese representatives. This would seem to put Premier Poincare in an uncomfortable position. If he opposes the German request he may find himself quite isolated; if he does not, the yielding means a great political defeat for him, for then the reparations commission would again be the sovereign authority on reparations questions.

PROBABILITY of the acceptance of Secretary Hughes' suggestion of an international commission to examine and determine Germany's capacity to pay is increasing daily. And it is assumed the United States would be represented on such a commission. Ambassador Harvey told a London audience that the proposition, which is backed warmly by Lloyd George, is still open, and President Coolidge has unqualifiedly indorsed what Mr. Harvey said. Then, after an interview with Lloyd George, Secretary Hughes made public the fact that Great Britain had asked the United States whether it was still willing to participate in an advisory economic conference on reparations, and that he had replied in the affirmative with the understanding that all the powers directly interested concur in the plan and take part in the conference. If France or any other interested power stands out, the question of American participation will require further consideration. It is believed France will concur.

HAVING received the report of its committee of investigation, the lower house of the Oklahoma legislature proceeded to hear the evidence obtained by the committee and then voted the impeachment of Governor Walton. Meanwhile the senate declared the governor suspended from office and instructed Lieutenant Governor Trapp to assume his duties, and then organized itself as a court of impeachment. Among the things of which Walton is accused are:

Diversion of public funds to his private use.

Use of his official influence to acquire private credit and property.

Accepting a bribe to approve a legislative bill.

Suspension of the writ of habeas corpus.

Unlawfully preventing a meeting of the state legislature.

The governor did not sit quiet under these attacks, but persistently refused to recognize the right of the senate to suspend him, and obtained from one of his judges a temporary restraining order directed against Trapp. The other side got a counter-order from the State Supreme court. Walton and his friends charge that the expenses of the legislators who gathered for the session on September 20, which he dispersed, were paid by the Ku Klux Klan. It has been announced that all the evidence against Walton will be submitted to a grand jury.

SERIOUS charges against Col. C. R. Forbes, former director of the veterans' bureau, have been made before the senate committee which is investigating the conduct of the bureau. These include conspiracy and graft and plots to dispose of dope and liquor. Construction companies that obtained from Forbes contracts to build hospitals are involved.

EVERY day it is becoming more evident to the politicians that Henry Ford is out after a presidential nomination, and they say he doesn't care whether it comes from the Republicans, the Democrats or a third party. Last week the Michigan Ford clubs issued a call for a conference of Ford-for-President clubs, to be held in Detroit on December 12, 13 and 14. The number of these clubs is believed to be between 300 and 400, and it is estimated that 3,000 delegates and visitors will attend the conference. It was announced that the purpose of the meeting was to form a new national party, headed by Ford, but it may be that will not be found necessary. The Democratic leaders seem more alarmed than the Republicans by the plans of the Ford followers, and the managers of the McAdoo boom especially are said to be worried. The former secretary of the treasury is admittedly the leading Democratic aspirant today, but Underwood and Ralston are still well up in the running.

REPUBLICAN politicians consider Governor Pinchot the only serious contender against President Coolidge for nomination by that party, for of late Hiram Johnson's stock has taken a tumble, except in the Far West. The Pennsylvanian has not yielded at all in his discussion with the White House concerning the best methods of enforcing prohibition. He says the President's program calling for full co-operation of state governments with the federal government does not go far enough to meet the issue and that, while the co-operation will be cordially given, the federal government has exclusive authority to prevent the issuance of liquor from unown sources of supply, and that so long as the government fails to exercise that authority effectively the states are almost powerless to deal with the resulting distribution of intoxicants to the individual.

MOROS in Zamboanga have been indulging in an uprising, in the course of which a number of men of the Philippine constabulary were killed. The affair became so serious that Governor General Wood went to the scene with a considerable body of troops.

THE National Council of the Congregational Churches, in session in Springfield, Mass., refused to give its approval to the Lord's Day Alliance, whose general secretary is Rev. H. L. Bowlby, leader in the national fight on Sunday movies, baseball and other forms of pleasure and business; but the council did declare for Sabbath observance. A resolution condemning the occupation of the Ruhr and asking France to withdraw her troops was tabled, and another directed against "unpatriotic societies" was adopted without specific mention of the Ku Klux Klan. The council is the first large denominational body to approve of the plan of organic church union proposed by the Presbyterian general assembly in 1918. The committee on comity was instructed to confer with a like committee of the Presbyterian assembly in working out details. The plan of ordination of Congregational ministers by Episcopal bishops, known as the concordat, was definitely disapproved. The plan of union of the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations, presented by joint action of the Presbytery and Congregational union of Cleveland, O., was approved.

ACCORDING to a report by the federal coal commission, a need for strict government regulation of the entire production and interstate distribution of coal has been made evident by the wild wholesale speculation whenever coal shortages have occurred. The wholesalers are accused of having made excessive profits, but those of the retailers are said to have been only moderate during the period from 1918 to 1922.

The commission advocates federal legislation, including the power to limit to a definite maximum amount per ton the margins that may be taken by one or more wholesalers between the mine and retailer or consumer, thus limiting speculative wholesale sales.

Balanced Ration Needed for Eggs

Profitable Returns From Laying Hens Are Largely Due to Good Feed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good egg production and profitable returns from laying hens are largely the result of properly balanced rations composed of wholesome feeds. Experiments in poultry feeding for egg production carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture show that it takes about 6.7 pounds of feed to produce a dozen eggs with general-purpose pullets while the egg-laying strains, such as Leghorns, require about 4.8 pounds of feed. Old hens require a much larger amount of feed in producing a dozen eggs.

Results From Simple Mixtures.

Simple mixtures composed of home-grown grains and their by-products, supplemented with meat or fish scrap or milk, give the most profitable results. A good scratch mixture is one made of two parts cracked corn and one part oats, while a mash of three parts cornmeal and one part meat scrap will be found very satisfactory. A fair amount of green feed with these rations should give good results with the flock, since the mash and scratch mixtures suggested combine the animal-protein feed, bulk, and fat required by a good balanced poultry ration.

The rations may be varied to include feeds that are easily obtained and that are comparatively inexpensive. Corn, wheat, oats and barley are the principal grains fed to poultry. Kafir corn and buckwheat are used also, but are not so generally available and cost more. Corn and wheat are the two best grains and are about equal in value as poultry feeds, although wheat can be fed alone better than corn, which is inclined to be fattening. Oats and barley, on account of their hulls and higher fiber content, are not so good as wheat or corn. Rye is not well relished by fowls and is seldom fed. Wheat screenings or slightly damaged grains may sometimes be bought to advantage, their value depending entirely upon their quality and condition, but as a rule it is good policy to stick to sound grains in good condition.

Mash Made of Ground Grains.

A mash made of ground grains, mill products, and meat scrap may use cornmeal, wheat bran, wheat middlings, or corn chop, corn-and-cob meal, or ground oats, depending upon the feeds available and the relative cost of each. It is worth remembering, however, that just as good results can be obtained with a simple mash containing three or four ground grains and meat scrap as from a highly complicated mash containing ten or twelve products.

Insects Attack Apples While Held in Storage

With more attention being paid to the grading of apples, anything which contributes to the deterioration of the fruit after packing or in storage will be of considerable interest to fruit growers. Observations made at Geneva and elsewhere show that late summer insects sometimes escape the notice of the packer and are put in storage, where later they may develop and do much damage to the fruit.

The larvae, or worm form of leaf-rollers, bud moth and case-bearers have been found feeding on apples piled in the orchard, while codling-moth larvae, the lesser apple worm, San Jose scale and apple maggots are known to have continued their feeding and development in supposedly sound fruit which had been placed in storage. Fortunately the codling moth and apple maggot confine their efforts to a single infested fruit, but the apple worm and San Jose scale may pass from apple to apple.

If the fruit can be placed in cold storage and held at just above freezing point until ready for use, little if any injury will result from insects inadvertently carried over with the apples. Although the larvae may not be killed, the low temperature will effectively check their growth. However, infested apples never keep quite so well in storage as do sound apples.

Exhaust of Automobile Is Sure Death to Lice

Most every farmer has a car of some kind; and most every farmer has chickens, and therefore is troubled with vermin in the chicken house at some time. Well, here is the connection. It is new and reliable.

Just attach a rubber hose to the exhaust pipe of your motor and put the other end in the chicken house—with the chickens all out, of course. Close the house as tightly as you can, let the motor run about ten minutes, and bingo! Bugs, lice, mites and other vermin are gone. It is the cheapest lice killer known.

Scheme for Getting Rid of Wild Onion or Garlic

Late fall plowing, followed by an infertilled crop the following year, will get rid of wild onion, or garlic. Corn in check-rows is a good crop to plant. To get rid of the onions in pasture, if the plants are too numerous, dig each plant and destroy it. Sheep eat the tops of the onion, and grazing for a few years often kills it out. Coal-tar creosote oil applied to each plant at the rate of about four thimblefuls is effective in killing both the plant and the ungerminated bulbs

Boy Wins First Prize at Indiana State Fair

Muncie Youth Takes Baby Beef Championship.

When the leaders of the live stock industry promoted the baby beef club work among boys and girls, they did not expect that within only a few years these juniors would be able to surpass the experienced veterans in the show arena. But this, however, happened at the recent Indiana state fair when the winner in the baby beef contest showed in the open classes and defeated the breeders themselves for the grand championship of the show.

The boy who had this proud distinction was William Robert Wilson, the son of the well-known Aberdeen-Angus breeder, W. W. Wilson of Muncie, Indiana. After winning at his county fair, the young man took his baby beef, Baron W. to Indianapolis to compete for the state championship. There he met stiff competition in the show of 62 calves, 24 of which were Shorthorns, 22 Aberdeen-Angus and 16 Herefords.

This promising stockman was asked to tell the story of his success for the benefit of the thousands of farmer boys and girls who are enrolled in club work all over the country. The following account is given in his own words:

"The calf that I showed in Indianapolis is a pure bred Angus. His sire is Belmont E. Baron and his dam is William Wilson and His Champion Steer, Baron W.

Leona Dean. I named him Baron W. I bought him of my father in March. He weighed on March 1, 920 pounds.

"When I bought him he was running in the lot with other cattle, feeding on ensilage, clover hay and straw. I tied him up for a week and began to feed him some ground oats and corn and oil meal with his ensilage and carried him water.

"I won grand champion on him at our county fair and then I took him to our state fair, where I won first in the calf club and grand champion of the club. Then he won first in the open Angus class and was made champion Angus steer and later grand champion over all breeds. I am going to show him at the International Live Stock Exposition in the Calf club contest."

Professor W. J. Kennedy, Sioux City, Iowa, who judged the steers at Indianapolis, is reported to have stated that the animals shown there were among the best he had seen this year.

Ordinary Grain Binder Will Handle Soy Beans

The essential thing when harvesting soy beans for grain is to do the work just when the pods are nearly ripe, for even a few days' delay will cause many of the dead-ripe pods to shatter. The Iowa experiment station says that small acreages of soy beans may be economically handled with an ordinary grain binder, for then the sheaves can be shocked like other grain and left until they are fit to hull. The beans may be colored up some from the rains, but they will be kept sound and sweet and will be fit for feed or for seed.

Energetic Fowls Found to Be Best Egg Layers

"The fowl that lays during the winter is the one that lays best during the summer months," says Annabelle Campbell, poultry specialist in the office of extension work with women, Minnesota university. "The fowl that lays best under adverse conditions is the one that also, after a short rest, produces during the winter, rests for a short time and then comes into laying in the spring and continues laying during the summer months until fall. The best fowls in the flock are those that require the least amount of rest."

Production of Turkeys Decreasing Every Year

The production of turkeys seems to decrease yearly. Perhaps this is due to the increase in the production of capons. Certain it is that capons are much easier to raise, and there are many people who will tell you that they like capon meat better than that of the turkey. Little has ever been done in the way of raising turkeys in confinement. When it has been tried the results have been discouraging. Capons, on the other hand, can be raised successfully in this manner.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 4

WORLD-WIDE PROHIBITION—WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

LESSON TEXT—Ps. 101:1-8; Prov. 12:23-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—"I will set no wicked thing before my eyes."—Ps. 101:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Taking Care of Our Bodies.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Effects of Alcohol.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Progress of Prohibition at Home and Abroad

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Fight Against Lawlessness.

I. Principles of a Righteous Life (Ps. 101:1-8).

This is a psalm of David the king, and therefore shows the conduct of a ruler. It is divided into two sections—the first, verses 1-4, refers to personal conduct, and the second, 5-8, to the government of others. This part of the lesson can only refer to the destruction of the saloon in the sense that all evil is to be uprooted and destroyed.

1. Personal Conduct (vv. 1-4). (1) Kindness and judgment (v. 1); (2) wise behavior (v. 2); (3) all malice put away (v. 3); all wickedness put aside (v. 4).

2. Government of Others (vv. 5-8). Only as one is right in his own heart and life is he fit to rule others. As a righteous man he will be against (1) the slanderer (v. 5). He will not tolerate such in his presence. (2) The worker of deceit (v. 7). The deceitful man and the liar are to be removed from his sight. (3) All workers of iniquity (v. 8). It is the duty of rulers to see that all workers of wickedness of all kinds be cut off. The manufacturer and seller of liquor should be regarded as notorious workers of iniquity. Those who blight manhood for sordid gain are grossly wicked.

II. The Awful Ruin Wrought by Strong Drink (Prov. 23:29-35).

1. Woes of Those Who Indulge in Wine (vv. 2, 30). (1) The awful pain which causes one to cry out, "Oh!" Many, indeed, are the pains which men suffer because of strong drink. Bodily ills innumerable can be traced to its evil influence. (2) The bitter remorse, which causes one to cry out, "Alas!" Many are the expressions of bitter regret which daily come from the lips of the drunkard. (3) Contention—strife and quarreling. Much of the fighting among men is directly caused by their passions being inflamed by strong drink. The drunken man is always ready to take offense, as well as to give it. (4) Babblings and complainings. The winebibber complains of everything—ill luck, loss of friends, of fate and of God. He sees everything wrong but himself. (5) Wounds without cause. These are wounds from fights in which a sober man would not have engaged, and from accidents which are purely the result of intoxication. (6) Redness of eyes. This has reference to the blood-shot eye of the tippler which dims his vision. All these woes come upon those who tarry long at wine.

II. The Attitude Enjoined (v. 31).

Look not at it. Do not put yourself into the way of temptation. The only safe attitude toward strong drink is total abstinence, and the only way to total abstinence is not to even look at it.

III. The Drunkard's Bitter End (vv. 32-35).

1. Acute Miseries. "It biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Strong drink, like the poison of a serpent, permeates the whole system and ends in the most fatal consequences.

2. Perversion of the Moral Sense. This excitement causes the eyes to behold strange things. This denotes the fantastic images produced on the brain of the drunkard. Even when delirium tremens does not result, there are awful fancies which are beyond the possibility of realization. Then does his heart utter perverse things. His moral sense being perverted, his utterances partake of the same. He tells lies; his words cannot be relied upon.

3. He Is Insensible to Danger (v. 34). He is foolhardy, even as one who would lie in the top of a ship's mast, where there is the greatest danger of falling off.

4. He Is Insensible to Pain (v. 35). The drunkard is utterly ignorant of what happens to him while under the influence of strong drink. Many bruises and wounds the drunkard has which he cannot account for.

5. His Abject Bondage (v. 35). After all his sufferings, sorrow and disappointments, he goes on as a bond slave in the ways of sin.

6. Hell at Last. No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven (I Cor. 6:10).

CHEVROLET

Every Farm Needs Two

EVERY farm needs two automobiles, one of which should be a closed model Chevrolet.

The open touring car is best for general farm use, carrying passengers or perhaps miscellaneous bulky produce or merchandise, but for cold or rainy weather, and for church or social use the family needs a closed car, either a 2-passenger Utility Coupé as illustrated, or the 5-passenger Sedan. The extra large rear compartment is a feature of the Coupé.

These closed cars are very finely made, furnished, upholstered and trimmed. The windows are of plate glass and can be lowered, providing as much air as an open car, yet affording full protection against wind, rain, snow or cold when raised.

With a second car on a farm, one is always available for those at home when the other car is out.

The low prices of Chevrolet make the ownership of two cars feasible for most farm families.

RAPID GROWTH HAS COME TO BAPTISTS

75 MILLION CAMPAIGN HAS LENT STRENGTH TO EVERY DEPARTMENT OF WORK

RESULTS IN SOUTH NOTED

Home and State Missions, Schools, Orphanages, Hospitals and Relief Report Marked Advances Under Forward Movement

DR. B. D. GRAY,
ern Baptist Convention
Secretary Home Mission Board South-

Suggesting the growth which the Baptist 75 Million Campaign has brought to the general work of Southern Baptists, it is reported by the general headquarters of the movement that during the four years that have intervened since the Campaign was inaugurated in 1919, the denomination has gained 57 district associations, 851 active ministers, 3,068 local churches, 3,287 Sunday schools with 459,223 pupils, 8,688 Young People's Unions with 233,917 members, and 7,094 Woman's Missionary Union organizations, and baptized 762,880 persons. At the same time the churches have given $28,776,937 more to missions, Christian education and benevolences than they did during the corresponding period prior to the Campaign, and have increased their investment in local church property by $45,405,118.

These increased resources made possible [illegible] and benevolences through the channels of the Campaign have been responsible for great advances in every area of denominational work, both at home and abroad.

Complete Church Building Fund

Among the outstanding achievements of the Home Mission Board, operating throughout the territory of the Southern Baptist Convention, are noted the completion of its million dollar church building loan fund, the baptism of 173,602 persons, reception into the churches of 277,968 persons, enlistment of 11,772 young people in the dedication of their lives to some definite form of Christian service, building or improvement of 1,873 church houses, and organization of 935 Baptist churches and 2,898 new Sunday schools.

Practically twice the state mission results have been accomplished in many of the states since the Campaign began as were had for any corresponding period of time prior to the movement.

Southern Baptists own 118 Baptist schools, colleges and seminaries, where nearly 40,000 young people are studying to fit themselves for larger usefulness. The number of students has been greatly increased through the Campaign making possible the larger equipment of the schools, and the investment which that movement has made possible in the schools is equal to about 45 per cent of their total value at the time the Campaign was inaugurated.

4,000 Orphans Cared For

Nearly 4,000 orphan boys and girls are cared for in the 19 Baptist orphanages of the South. Two new orphanages have been provided by the Campaign and practically all of the older ones have been given better equipment by this movement. The equipment is not large enough yet, as 2,000 boys and girls had to be turned away last year because the institutions had no more room.

When the Campaign was launched Southern Baptists had only 13 hospitals. Today that number has been increased to 21. Last year over 47,000 patients were treated in these hospitals, a large number of these being charity patients who could not have had an opportunity to get well except through some such assistance.

The Relief and Annuity Board, serving aged ministers, is now aiding more than 925 beneficiaries and has expended in direct relief since the Campaign began the sum of $414,892.46.

It will require $31,000,000 additional cash to complete the Campaign by the end of the period in 1924, and every effort is being made to enlist all Southern Baptists in having a share in this task.

SHALL WE PARTICIPATE?

The readiness of Europe to accept the co-operation of the United States, even in a merely advisory capacity, is indicated by the prompt French acceptance of the British proposal for a joint commission to consider the extent of Germany's ability to pay reparations. This commission, to be composed of business men [illegible] was suggested by Secretary Hughes, who later accepted the British invitation for this government to be represented on such commission. Premier [illegible] has chosen the British alternative proposal that the [illegible] the inter-allied reparations commission, and he will probably accept the American stipulation that the question of reparations shall be separated from discussion of inter-allied debts.

This commission will have no authority with respect to the application of its findings, but it is expected to have the fullest liberty of inquiry, examination, discussion and decision as to Germany's economic capacity. The world would like to know for a surety whether Germany is actually unable to meet her stipulated obligations or whether she is merely shamming. If she is shamming, the next question will be how she may be made to pay, for surely the powers will not meekly accept an actual and undisguised refusal to meet definite and agreed payments.

In any event, the fact will still remain that France is firmly entrenched in the position of economic strategy and that Germany, while refusing to meet an obligation, would assuredly find the money for the ransom of her richest industrial area. France has collected an asset greater by far than her claims. The redemption of this asset would be only ordinary business judgment on Germany's part.

The significant feature of the whole affair is that our government is finally yielding to the necessity of partaking in some degree in European councils. Secretary Hughes has long desired to follow such a policy. It is probable that Mr. Harding [illegible] with the view of his sect [illegible]. The selection for the position [illegible] tish ambassador of a Republican such liberal views as Mr. K[illegible] serves to create the impression [illegible] Mr. Coolidge is not antagonistic to the opinions of Mr. Hughes. The developments of the next few weeks should throw light on this point.—Age-Herald.

BOARD OF METHODIST CHURCH ENTERTAINED

The Pastor, Dr Wilkerson and Wife, Do the Honors of the Occasion.

One of the most pleasant, and at the same time, profitable, entertainments of the season took place at the Methodist Parsonage last Friday night, when the pastor, Dr. C. C. Wilkerson and his most estimable lady, entertained at luncheon the official Board of Members of that church.

There were 17 guests present to enjoy the hospitality of the pastor and his wife and all of them were a unit in expressing their pleasure, not only so far as the luncheon was concerned, but also in reference to the delightful social entertainment of this splendid christian home.

Among the numerous delectable viands served at the table we mention only the fact that fresh plant oysters were served in three styles so that the particular relish of each guest could not fail to have them to taste.

Each guest was called on for a speech and, to their credit be it said, everyone of them rose to the emergency, and much enthusiasm for the future development of the church was displayed.

After the delightful offerings of the table were generously dispensed of the Board proceeded to reorganize for another year. Mr. R. C. McDavid, who had put up a year of most acceptable and efficient service as chairman of the board tendered his resignation, which, upon his earnest solicitation, was accepted and Col. J. O. Middleton was elected for the ensuing term.

Reports of the work done for the year were discussed and were most encouraging. The report to be sent to the General Conference, which will convene in Opelika on Nov. 14, was made up and was most flattering.

A motion was put and enthusiastically carried by a unanimous vote, asking the Conference to return Dr. Wilkerson here for another year and the Chairman was instructed to communicate with the Presiding Elder in regard thereto at once. They will surely grant this request for Dr. Wilkerson is right now in the midst of building for us here a splendid $50,000 church and could not be spared.

Before adjournment the future needs and necessities of the church were discussed and each member pledged himself to be even more energetic and loyal for the next year than for the past. Thirteen of the members promised to be out at prayer meeting this week.

Work on the new church is being pushed rapidly now and as the top goes on the massive building looks more and more imposing.

EXTENSION WORK

Last Saturday Dr. E. C. Howe of the University of Alabama organized an extension center here at Clanton for this winter. He will give a course in Modern European History from 1871 to date, in other words the course deals primarily with the World War, its causes and results.

Any teachers of mature years or any individual desiring to do so may take this course. The course will be equal to that given resident students of the University and any person of this county desiring to take the course will be able to do so providing they meet at the County High School building next Saturday at 9 a. m.

Respectfully,
HOWARD L. FOSHEE,
County Supt. Education.

A HAPPY MARRIAGE

One of the happiest events of the season occurred at the Baptist pastorium last Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock, when Dr. Ezell united in the holf bonds of wedlock Mr. A. S. Prince and Miss Lelo Jones, both popular young people of Clanton.

The happy groom is one of the railroad telegraph operators at this point and has been located here for quite a long time. He has made a host of friends and is recognized by everyone here as a young man of absolute reliability and sterling worth.

The lovely bride is almost a Clanton product, her family having moved from the country into town in her childhood days. She is the center of a large circle of admiring friends and is a splendid Sunday School and church worker.

This handsome couple have been sweethearts almost ever since Mr. Prince came to Clanton, and during all of that blissful period each one has seemed to cherish a sentiment of constancy that is as beautiful as it is rare, in the swiftly moving days.

It is not saying too much for this happy couple to say that they will carry with them on their blissful voyage of life the very best wishes of every citizen of Clanton.

The Chilton County-News would beg to extend to them its most sincere felicitations and wishes for the full realization of all of their fondest dreams.

STATE BAPTIST CONVENTION.

The annual session of the Alabama State Baptist Convention will convene in Montgomery on next Tuesday, Nov. 13, and continue four days.

A large delegation is going from the local church. They expect to have over 2000 delegates present.

WHAT WE MISS

More auto tourists than in any previous season to date have already gone south for the winter.

Thousands of these people, a few years since, passed through Clanton and spent money here going and coming, but under the ridiculous management of our Highway Commission, we are missing all of this traffic now.

Our highway is only a memory and the place that knew it once is a corrugated collection of holes and mud puddles. The tourist now has to detour through Georgia and Alabama has to set idly by and see the dollars roll into other pockets.

How much graft and politics are responsible for this condition no one can say.

SYRUP MAKING

From a little 20 mile trip in the country Monday afternoon we observed that quite a good deal of sugar cane has been made and on almost every farm we passed cane stripping, hauling or grinding seemed to be in progress.

Syrup is a very important crop. It helps out wonderfully on the home table and, when properly made and put up, it brings a pretty good margin of profit in the market.

FIRE SALE

M. Lande is selling out, in the McDonald old stand near the railroad, the goods salvaged from the recent fire that destroyed his immense department store stock.

It is to be hoped that he will be able to recoup a part of his serious loss by this sale.

Miss Mabel Stallworth of Anniston was in Clanton two days this week. Miss Stallworth represents the Mutual Benefit Insurance Company of N. Y. City. She is a well educated, cultured, refined lady in addition to her good business and civic qualities.

Mr. W. H. Rasco and son, James, were here Tuesday and made us a pleasant call at our sanctum.

TO THE PUBLIC

Still Living and Working.

Yes, I am right here, just west of the railroad crossing, with offices in the Roper Building, and with the help of the Lord I expect to do more work than ever before.

Last summer, when I was very sick, and it appeared to me and my best friends that I could never be well again, a cowardly, vile, wretch, who is worse than a thief and equal to a robber who would cut ones throat in the dark and rob his dead body, undertook to take advantage of my sickness and start a black and infamous lie regarding a conversation that it was alleged had taken place between my wife and daughter, and to this, other insinuations were added. Now, I want to brand this party as being everything low that the English language can describe and want to offer him $1,000.00 and promise to borrow the money to pay it, if he will just let his identity be known and bring up the evidence to prove one iota of truth in his statement. I will also do lots more for him that I am not mentioning here.

Yes, I am here, and believe that the Lord is going to bless me with complete recovery of my health and I know that I will have all the work that I can do among the very best class of people.

Sincerely yours,
V. J. GRAGG.

SOUTH CALERA INKLINGS

We had preaching Sunday at Shiloh M. E. Church. Bro. Jones delivered his farewell sermon. There was a large crowd.

J. N. Brickey, H. F. Virgin and Cecil Martin blocked the cotton market at Jemison Monday, which caused the market to fall half a cent in less than 20 minutes.

T. D. Walker of Anniston was a caller at T. N. Brickey's Sunday.

Mr. Roy Roberts and little daughter, Elizabeth, were in Clanton on business Monday.

Miss Lela Splawn was a pleasant caller on Mrs. Ellen Ellison Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. House were visitors at the home of Mr. Elisha Ellison Sunday.

Miss Bessie Busby of Marble was visiting her parents at South Calera Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Louise Martin of Calera visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Busby at this place.

Mrs. Tom Sanders called on Mrs. J. N. Brickey Saturday.

Mrs. Fanny Busby visited her daughters in Calera Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Posey Stevens was a pleasant caller at Mrs. John Broadhead's Saturday.

Mrs. Fanny Busby and Mrs. J. N. Brickey were callers on Mrs. Roy Roberts Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Ida Jones called on Mrs. Roy Roberts Saturday.

Miss Lutie Jones called on Miss Lois and U. U. Busby Sunday.

Mr. Abe Williams has returned home from an extended visit with relatives in Birmingham.

J. N. Brickey is erecting a new barn on his farm to store his crop in.

Judge George F. Smoot of Wetumpka is measuring up to the 100 percent mark in this judicial circuit. The judge is a scholarly lawyer and we predict that very few of his decisions will be turned down by the Supreme Court of Alabama.

Mr. J. T. Fussell and family of Boling were in Clanton Saturday. Mr. Fussell was a citizen of Maplesville for a number of years, but is now engaged in the lumber business in Butler County.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIS LYMAN VISITORS TO MONTEVALO

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Lyman, who were married at Fort Mill, South Carolina, on October 17th made a short visit to Charleston and other points in South Carolina, and then came by Montevallo to visit the groom's parents, Judge and Mrs. E. S. Lyman. Mrs. Lyman before her marriage, was Miss Boyd, and was private secretary to the President of Alabama College for eight years. Mr. Lyman is a native of Montevallo, and now a prominent lumber dealer of Chilton county. They received a cordial welcome at the college and in Montevallo. They have a home in Clanton and in Billingsley where Mr. Lyman has considerable interests.

The above article appeared in last week's issue of the Shelby County Reporter. The only correction we wish to call attention to is the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Lyman will make their future home in Clanton having purchased the beautiful home on North Tenth Street formerly occupied by Mr. John M. Vandervеer and family.

The people in Clanton are more than glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Lyman as citizens of our town and county. This estimable couple will be quite an addition to the civic and religious life of our fair little city.

Mr. Lyman is the son of Judge E. S. Lyman of Montevallo who was recently appointed Judge of the Eighteenth Judicial Circuit owing to the death of Judge Lackey.

DON'T NARROW THE ROADS.

We have not been over the highway from here to Cooper since the recent working that was given it, but from the comments we hear made by some of those who have, we fear a mistake has been made in drawing in the ditches on the side.

A 30 foot road is not really wide enough to safely accommodate automobile traffic and to make a road even narrower than that is absolutely inviting disaster.

Some of the traveling men have told us that the road has been made so narrow that cars can hardly pass each other without great danger of turning turtle.

If these conditions are really as serious as they are reported, just a few big washing rains will do the rest and we will have a one way road, and, like the railroads, will have to have passing [illegible] and block signals for a two way service. Some of the people who travel say that they are going to detour and [illegible] west of the railroad. [illegible] public road is supposed to be [illegible] 30 feet in width and in all conscience, that's narrow enough.

LUCK SMILES ON THE COUNTRY EDITOR

It is said that the "devil cares for [illegible]." Whether that has anything to do with it or not, just as the wood man, the coal man and the landlord had about made our meal barrel look like the pocket of a hungry hobo, our good old standby, Mr. J. A. Burke of Route 7 came by the house and put off a great sack of Porto Rica yams that would cause the mouth of a corn fed epicure to water. The most of us country quill pushers live mainly by faith anyhow.

Poincare Accepts the Hughes Plan for Committee of Experts, With Reservations.

GERMAN ROYALISTS MOBILIZE

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SOLUTION of the German reparations problem, which in large measure is the economic and financial problem of all Europe, is now within the bounds of possibility if not probability. Secretary Hughes' suggestion of a committee of experts is likely to be adopted, with some modifications. Assured by Washington that the United States would participate in an advisory capacity, Great Britain asked France whether she would agree to the plan, and Premier Poincare's reply was prompt and as satisfactory as could well be expected. In a public speech, a proclamation and notes to London, he accepted the proposals in principle, but insisted the findings of the experts must be only advisory in character and relating only to the present capacity of Germany to pay, and should not be necessarily binding on either the reparations commission or the governments concerned. The selection of the experts, except the American, he said, should be made by the reparations commission. In his speech he also declared France would not permit a discussion of a reduction in the reparations total fixed in May, 1921, at 132,000,000,000 gold marks ($33,000,000,000), or a suggestion for an abandonment of the guarantees.

With these restrictions, M. Poincare consented to join in an invitation to the United States to send representatives to the conference of experts. At first the English were disappointed and angry, but the government decided to accept the French reservations. There is no reason to believe any other of the nations concerned will object to the plan.

The reparations commission, on motion of Sir John Bradbury, English, ruled that no one of the nations had the right to dictate as to the competence, or to define or limit the jurisdiction of the commission in dealing with the problem of the German indemnity. This might permit the overriding of the French restrictions, and even the discussion of the interallied debts so far as they affect reparations. Poincare's reservations are not held by the administration at Washington to be a bar to the execution of the Hughes plan and our part in putting it into operation is under way. The Europeans would like to see an American made chairman of the committee of experts, and would prefer J. P. Morgan, Roland Boyden or Paul Cravath. It may be Mr. Morgan would not serve, and there is talk of the selection of Elihu Root. Washington has made it plain to the allies that by participation in the conference we accept no responsibility for the enforcing of its findings.

Meanwhile, the German industrial magnates and General Degoutte have been in conference trying to arrange for resumption of work in the Ruhr and of the payment of reparations in kind. If the accord is signed it will provide that the German government shall pay the industrialists for deliveries to France, beginning next spring. At this writing the Germans have yielded to almost all the French demands except restrictions of their rights to free trade with unoccupied Germany and the rest of the world. Krupp von Bohlen was paroled from prison to take part in the conferences. On Thursday he signed the accord.

DISPATCHES from Germany insist that Chancellor Stresemann's government is "tottering on the brink." The Socialists are still threatening to quit him, and the monarchists are trying to bring about a "dictatorship for the whole country with the ultimate purpose, presumably, of restoring the empire. This movement is fostered especially by the Bavarians, and toward the end of the week it was reported that they had mobilized between 20,000 and 30,000 troops along the Thuringian frontier for a march on Berlin, that reinforcements were flocking to the royalist colors from all sides and that 15,000 Bavarian reichswehr at Bamberg were ready to join. This body of reichswehr troops was "kidnaped" from the central government by Bavaria and she stubbornly refuses the demands of Stresemann that they be restored. Socialists in the Berlin cabinet rage at Stresemann for what they consider his mildness toward Bavaria, but he refused to press action against Munich until he had settled his troubles with the Saxon government. That he appears to be doing, for the Saxon cabinet retired from office at his demand and another ministry was formed exclusively of Socialists. This has offended the more radical Socialists.

In various parts of the Rhineland the separatists held out against the attacks of the police, the workers and the Socialists, but they did not make much headway. The British government announced that it would not countenance the establishment of an independent republic within the borders of Germany since the allies in the treaty of Versailles had guaranteed the integrity of German territory. M. Poincare in reply denied that either France or Belgium had given the separatists assistance and said the Rhineland republic was developing as freely without encouragement as without hindrances.

Former Crown Prince Friedrich Wilhelm has asked permission of the Dutch government to return to Germany. Holland does not object but would not permit him to return again to that country. It is said the German government will allow the exprince to go home provided he lives quietly on his estate in Silesia. Whether his request has any connection with the royalist movement is a question

BY VOTE of the Angora assembly Turkey was declared a republic last week, and Mustapha Kemal was elected its first president. Ismet Pasha was appointed premier and formed a cabinet. Great Britain has asked Turkey to open pourparlers on the Mosul question, and it is said both the British and the French are offering the Turks loans and concessions in the effort to obtain the things which they failed to get by diplomacy at Lausanne.

DIPLOMATS of the United States and the British empire have settled the rum running issue between America and Great Britain and agreed upon a treaty. This pact will give our prohibition enforcers the right to search suspected liquor smuggling vessels as far as "an hour's sailing from the American shore"—the proposed twelve-mile limit not being mentioned. In return America will formally affirm the three-mile limit as governing British maritime rights generally, and, what is more important, British ships will be allowed to carry liquor under seal into American territorial waters. Washington will undertake similar arrangements with other nations.

Thus, so far as the diplomats are concerned, all is lovely. But the United States senate is still to be reckoned with. Of course the drys approve of the extension of the search limit, but some of them will strenuously object to the section that permits British vessels to bring in liquor under seal. In this they have the purely selfish support of American shipping interests. Wayne B. Wheeler, counsel for the Anti-Saloon league, doesn't believe that part of the proposed treaty would be constitutional.

IN THE controversy with Governor Pinchot over what he calls the failure of the federal government to enforce prohibition, Secretary Mellon has taken up the cudgel in behalf of the administration. Rather it should be said Pinchot forced the cudgel into Mellon's hand. The governor in a letter to the secretary placed on the federal permit system the blame for the "breakdown" of prohibition enforcement in Pennsylvania and declared that Mellon, as secretary of the treasury, has the power to cut off the flood of illicit liquor at its source by revoking the permits. In reply Mellon said the treasury is invoking every available means for prohibition enforcement, that statements to the contrary by Pinchot were "gratuitous and not founded on fact," and that it would be better for the governor to expend his energy in ascertaining facts and actually enforcing the law rather than in the promotion of "unjustified criticism." Pinchot retorted that Mellon was merely defending "things as they are." All of this discussion means, to the average citizen, merely that Governor Pinchot is becoming an active rival of President Coolidge for the presidential nomination next year, and that Secretary Mellon is enlisted in support of Mr. Coolidge.

FRANK B. KELLOGG, former United States senator from Minnesota, has been selected by President Coolidge to succeed George Harvey as American ambassador to Great Britain, and the British government has announced that his appointment will be highly satisfactory. Over here the President's choice was generally commended except by certain of the old "irreconcilables" who remember Mr. Kellogg was a mild reservationist when the question of the League of Nations was before the senate. However, there is little doubt that the senate will confirm his appointment, and no doubt at all that Mr. Kellogg has sufficient ability and diplomatic skill to fill the post with credit.

GOVERNOR WALTON of Oklahoma was arraigned before the state senate court of impeachment Thursday on twenty-two charges of corruption in office, wilful neglect of duty, moral turpitude and general incompetency. The actual trial was delayed by a lot of legal skirmishing. The governor seemingly bases his defense on the klan issue.

A Muskogee newspaper printed a story that two members of the senate had been offered bribes of $10,000 to vote a certain way on the verdict, and the editor and his Oklahoma City correspondent were called before the senate court to explain the article and tell where the information was obtained.

Hunter, commanding the Delphi, flagship and leader of the nine destroyers which grounded, and Lieut. Lawrence F. Blodgett, navigator of the Delphi, will be charged before a general court-martial with "culpable inefficiency in the performance of duty," and negligence. Eight other officers will be tried for negligence.

ANDREW BONAR LAW, former prime minister of Great Britain and chancellor of the exchequer under Lloyd George, died in England after a lingering illness. He was considered one of England's best informed and soldiest statesmen, though lacking many of the qualities that make for popularity. A greater loss to the world came in the death of Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz at Schnectady, N. Y. His achievements and discoveries in electrical engineering had made him world famous and his devotion to science was utterly unselfish.

Trying to Cover Up.

Miffles, whose social bulls are notorious, found himself at a party talking to a melancholy looking man whom Miffles did his best to cheer. He indicated a lady of more than usual lack of beauty and said, "Heavens, who do you suppose that hideous old dame is?"

Of course, the melancholy little man said, "That's my wife."

Miffles had done it again, but his kindly heart went blundering on, inspiring him to say, "Cheer up, old man; you ought to see mine."

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"I OFFER A SHIP"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer. John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a byword in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and cruise the seas. He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. De Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admittedly Jean Lafitte, at his country house. Lafitte, accused of the abduction of Mademoiselle Lestron, is warned of the approach of a military party seeking to arrest him. He escapes to the swamps of Barataria. Lafitte learns that Mademoiselle Lestron has been placed on the ship Genaron, for the West Indies. Influenced by his followers of the freebooting days, and by De Almonaster, chief owner of the Seraphine, Lafitte agrees to seize the ship and sail to the rescue of Mademoiselle Lestron.

He took his snuff debonairly. And suddenly, with a shout of joy, the hairy giant, Johanness, seized the count's slender hand. "There—once more! I told you, Jean, that this young aristocrat was the truest adventurer of us all! Now, he proposes a ship! A ship for Sazarac!"

The Captain Sazarac in turn grasped De Almonaster's hand: "Well, then, Bohon, get word to the Temple! Choose your fellows well, and have them come by the water trails secretly to Monsieur Berthoud's plantation across from the upper city. And not a field-hand or house-slave must so much as have sight of a shirt-tail of you all. No liquor, there! No brawling, until we have descended by the old smuggler's road and taken the Napoleon ship!"

The score of figures crowded on the lugger's deck, or wading waist-deep about her bow, holding the flambeaus and striving to listen to the conference, raised a hoarse cry. Crackley, the leader of the deserters, strove for dominance over the younger men.

"Eh, bullies! I told you there would be blood-letting, once we had the man to lead us! A ship, and then over the line at the king o' Spain's traffic, says I!"

At a word from Bohon there was a scattering of the islanders from the smuggler's rail. A whispered conference here and there; secret orders given; gesticulations of surprise and exultation, as the lieutenants explained what must be arranged.

At the lugger's bow there now stood but two figures. The gamester, Sazarac, had placed a hand on the younger man's shoulder.

"You peril your life and your fortune, Monsieur. There is but one stake for which I would accept such a mad offer from a friend. One night, upon the staircase at the hotel, I said bluntly, merely as a vagabond may speak his thought, with nothing to lose or gain—that I loved the lady of my wager at Maspero's. I went my way, asking no answer. The moonlight was on the palms and myrtle . . . I could not well see, but I thought something fell and vanished from my sight. It might have been her answer."

"Very likely it was the lady's answer," smiled De Almonaster.

"Eh, well! Out of the shadows it came—into the shadows it vanished. It appears to be like my life. It seems to have the prophecy of my love. Ah, a curious thing!—a flicker in the moonlight—and silence!"

"I offer, Monsieur, a ship, my friendship, my fortune—to compel the lady to answer!"

The bronzed adventurer laughed slightly. "Thank you, Monsieur!"

But suddenly his companion started with an amazed gasp.

"Sazarac, I have forgotten something! Perdition! It just came to my dullard mind! The plot is to seize the Seraphine tomorrow night as she lies at her moorings before the Place d'Armes!"

"Certainly the venture cannot be delayed a moment beyond that—"

"Well and good! But it is the night of the banquet to celebrate the plot Napoleon. I, myself, am to make a modest speech of acceptance for my aunt, Baroness Pontalba, as I take over her interests in outfitting the Seraphine!"

"I should say it is very well. Putting back to the city at once, with your blacks, and appearing at the affair, you are shielded from all connivance with what the infamous Sazarac may do."

"Ah, but!" exclaimed De Almonaster. "There is to be a ball at the Theatre d'Orleans. The youth and chivalry of the city are to dance there, and then away to the Seraphine herself to revel and drink to the plot upon her decks."

"At what hour, Monsieur? I admit this is disconcerting."

"At twelve o'clock. The ship will be ablaze with lanterns and hung with ribbons! Nom de Dieu! It is too late to change the affair! I could bite my fingers that I did not think of the banquet. Commander Bossiere will preside. De Marigny, Barre, Pierre des Trehan, young De la Vergne—the officers of the garrison and the municipality—the affair will be an uproar until sunrise!"

"Midnight," commented the other. "Well, then—by Bonaparte, himself—Monsieur Sazarac shall attend. He will stand at the banquet table in the emperor's suite and toast the absent guests. He will be the ghost out of the dark, and fleeting out to the darkness that awaits him. He will be brief in his role, this Sazarac—grasping at a flicker of moonlight; and for his answer—silence."

"Belles Chandelles, M'sieu! Madame! Belles Chandelles!"

CHAPTER VIII

The Revelers of the Place d'Armes.

In the dusky radiance of the chain oil-lamps suspended from corner to corner, the vagrant candle seller held his handful of green wax myrtle tapers high, peering up at the iron gallery to the possible customer.

"Belles chandelles! Petits belles chandelles—Madame!"

The magnificent lady ignored him with disdain, and the shabby old figure shambled on with its cry:

"Belles chandelles, M'sieu! Madame—belles chandelles!"

At the corner of the rue Royale and Orleans just behind the cathedral the peddler stopped and hitched his cloak higher over his basket. The rue d'Orleans was a blaze of light showing forth the low facade of the famous ballroom. From carriages, dusky, bejeweled women were alighting; and across the cobbles grooms led horses from which gentlemen had just dismounted to wander by groups to the barroom or to the crowded vestibule of the Quadroon ball. Laughing, jesting gallants, some of more youthful appearance glancing rather timorously up the street, for this was a frolic not countenanced openly—and yet the gentlemen of the town and the plantations would be there. Favorites and mistresses—the famed beauties of the demi-monde—and perhaps a few better recognized were lured to the Ball d'Orleans to wonder curiously how brothers, fathers and lovers might comport themselves at the revel.

The old candle seller, in the shadow of the trees in the cathedral garden across the rue Royale, watched unceasingly. Behind him lay the narrow-paved Alley St. Antoine between the church and the gloomy, high-galleried buildings jutting over it. The other end opened on the Place d'Armes; and beyond that, the levee where there was a group of lanterns forming an arch over a carpeted gangway that led to the deck of the gayly lighted Seraphine.

The candle peddler looked each way casually. At length, from the crowd before the ballroom vestibule—amidst the flash of carriage wheels, sleek-coated animals turning among the bright-coated gentlemen and shouting hostlers, there came one brown-skinned fellow tugging to hold back a spirited steed. Unsteadily, as by chance he was jerked on by the horse, the groom finally held up at the banquette of broad stones on which stood the idle candle seller. To him the groom muttered:

"Monsieur Almonaster is here. He thought it best. They gibe him roundly about the affair Lafitte, but he protests—he has given half his plantation force to the military and the city guard who are beating out the woods for the stolen lady. He has denounced as deeply as any against the outrage—and he thought it best to come join the gallants. How goes it, Gorgio?"

"With the few of us in town—well. And, be assured, across the river the Captain Jean will have his fellows ready! Be on, now! You must not talk to me overlong. Only, Teton, we idle here, armed and watchful—and a word from your master—"

"Monsieur de Almonaster is to send word by me—I am to hang about drinking with the servants at our side entrance—watching."

"Word must come in time—before the party leaves for the ship—we must know that an hour before."

"My master will be assured. The fun grows furious already—it will be drawn ere they think of supper on the Seraphine."

"Be gone! Here comes one of the police guard!"

The quarter-blood groom led on De Almonaster's horse. And again the candle seller raised his monotonous cry down the rue Royale. And from the river end of Antoine's alley wandered another figure; at the deep entry to the Padre's house, midway in the tree-shaded obscurity, the old Andalusian beggar sank on the stones with a sigh—and adjusted the pair of pistols at his belt to more ease.

When Gorgio wandered this way again, the vagrant seemed asleep. Then came his mutter: "Perhaps, on the rue de la Levee—by the first market stall, there might await a customer. Thou art too noisy at the best for the Padre's street, eh—Frere Diable?"

"Custom is bad at least," retorted Gorgio, "but you—the police will harry you on as well."

"Not with Padre Antoine, my good friend, above at his book," growled the other. "Do as I bid—I was sent."

And on idled the candle man, with his owl-cry to the galleried homes. Under the thick arches of the ancient market he bantered hoarsely about the cabbage and fowl stalls. At this hour the market was little visited and few kept open. A few lazy Indian women and mulattoes grumbled back at Gorgio's jests; an early cart or two backed in to unload for the morrow's business, and it was to one of these, on which a trio of trucksters smoked idly, that the old man came.

They shot down dark, inscrutable glances.

"Pierre," muttered Gorgio, "you are in charge of these?"

"In all, sixteen of us, sleeping about the stalls," came in the patois. "The police guards note nothing. But of the fellows who must cross by the river, there is delay. What was the hour?"

"It cannot be set to a moment. At midnight the ball must have taken every idler from the plaza to crowd about and gape at the gentry. Save for the cursed lights about the ship itself, all would be clear. It must be touch and board quickly."

"Two of Johanness' men are already enlisted in the crew. They report all well, save that old Bossiere fusses about the tables on the deck—the lights and wine and cuisine keep the servants all astir."

"He will go to the ball later. As commander of the Napoleon expedition, and the affair in honor of the Seraphine's departure on a next week's tide, the young bravos will have him in the whirl."

"Monsieur de Almonaster's groom is to fetch the first word to me—I to Peter, the beggar, who plays the sot on the steps of the Padre's house. He to you in the market—then you to the lantern signal under the rue Toulouse landing. Then the six boats shoot with all speed from the other shore. At the first commotion as they swing aboard, your fellows rush openly from the market, cast off the mooring lines and join. It is overboard with any who oppose."

"Ah, to play the part of Sazarac—one hour!"

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 11

SOME MISSIONARY TEACHINGS OF THE PSALMS

LESSON TEXT—Ps. 47, 67, 100.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Let the people praise Thee, O God, let all the people praise Thee."—Ps. 67:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Everybody Praising God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Everybody Serving God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—All Nations Called to Serve Jehovah.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Missionary Hymns of the Old Testament.

The Jewish people were called to be missionaries to the other nations. The Psalter, their hymn book, is saturated with the spirit of God's grace to the world. Its dominant note is the call to come back to God.

I. A Call to Recognize God's Power (Ps. 47).

Man's first sin was to cast off God. Such abyssmal darkness followed that the race has gone on in ignorance of its Creator and Benefactor. The first and primary need of the missionary is to get the heathen to know God. They must come to know Him not only as a mighty King, but as a personal, tender-hearted being, looking out over the world with compassion, desiring to save and bless man. His only creature in His image and likeness. Oh, that the heathen knew God as their true and great King whose mighty power He desires to use in salvation and blessing to all! Let us make this known to the ends of the earth!

II. A Call for the Nations to Return to God (Ps. 67).

The central theme of this psalm is the universal diffusion of God's grace. The order of thought in this psalm is that which shall be carried out by the Lord in the completion of His work of grace in the world.

1. God's Blessing Upon Israel (vv. 1, 2). This blessing is necessary in order that Israel may be fitted to make known God's way to the nations. This grace will be poured out upon Israel in the full coming of Pentecost. When this grace is poured out there will be such missionary activity as has hitherto been unknown. When Israel, like her national representative Paul, shall go forth in such power of the Holy Spirit in witnessing for Christ, truly nations shall be born in a day. That which shall be manifested by Israel for their God-appointed task is needed by the church in her witnessing. She needs the Spirit of God to fit her to preach the gospel to the heathen.

2. The Conversion of the Heathen (vv. 3-5). Thanksgiving will be given for salvation offered and accepted. Not only this, but there will be rejoicing in the experience of salvation. They will rejoice in the fact now that the great and righteous God rules the earth. The new-born soul rejoices in knowing that a dispensation of justice tempered with mercy has been ushered in. What gladness will be in the hearts of men in the day when Christ reigns!

3. Restoration of Blessings Upon the Earth (vv. 6,7). When man cast off God a curse was placed upon the earth which limited its fruitfulness. Immediately upon man's return to God this curse will pass away from the earth. The supreme obstacle to prosperity is man's rebellion against God. Let the nations return to God and He will send His blessing upon them. The only way to bring back peace and prosperity is by the preaching of the gospel. Man must be called back to God. The supreme need of the world is not a league of nations, but a return to God; because God will remain separate from the nations as long as they are in rebellion against Him.

III. A Call to Recognize the Goodness of God (Ps. 100).

Praise should go up to God because He is God. Being God He created us, sustains us and saves us. For His unchanging mercy and goodness praise should be continually ascribed to Him.

What Life Consists Of.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth." In these words Jesus strikes at the popular error of all ages—the belief that life consists in things. For nothing are we under deeper obligation to Christianity than for this, that it corrects our easy views of life. Since the first man started heavenward, there have been two conflicting ideals of life; one teaches that life's values are in the things we get and keep; the other holds that the chief end of man is to develop his highest powers, to live in fear of that which is beneath him, and in reverence for That which is above him.—Rev. C. C. Albertson, D. D.

Neglected Children.

It is often difficult to tell which are more neglected—the children of the very rich or the children of the very poor.—Kenneth D. Miller.

Love for the Home.

Breaks or Hardens the Heart.

Contact with the world either breaks or hardens the heart.—Chamfort.

A Mother's Advice Prevents Operation

Corona, N. Y.—"I had a terrible pain in my left side and had to go to bed every so often. A Sickly Child

Mahoningtown, Pa.—"I would like to say a few words about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About a year ago I thought it would be necessary for me to take my daughter out of school. She was losing weight, was nervous, and when she would come home from school she would drop into a chair and cry, and say, 'Mamma, I don't believe I can go to school another day!' I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now she is a healthy, happy, hearty, strong girl and weighs 120 pounds. She has no difficulty in doing her 'gym' work, and she works at home every night and morning, too. I am a mother who can certainly praise your medicine, and if it will be of any benefit you may use this letter as a reference."—Mrs. GEORGE E. WHITACRE, 621 W. Madison Ave., Mahoningtown, Pa.
